

Diefenbaker Breaks Silence

WINNIPEG (CP) — Prime Minister Diefenbaker, in his first major foreign policy speech since the June 18 election, said Saturday night recent weeks have seen fewer Russian provocations and this should prompt the West to reassess its policies and goals.

He restated Canada's support of international negotiations, firmly behind proposals to bring over Berlin and disarmament. Mr. Diefenbaker, speaking to the Ukrainian-Canada Association's seventh congress, said the Canadian government will make every effort to realize this goal at the Geneva disarmament conference.

Manning Worries

CALGARY (CP) — New Social Credit MPs must not embarrass their party with rash actions and their supporters must not pressure them into irresponsible moves, Premier Manning told the Young Social Crediters convention.

"I confess it makes my hair stand on end to hear some of the things these professed Social Crediters have to say," he said.

Socreds Shun Second Fiddle

CALGARY (CP) — National Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson Saturday declared his party will not play second fiddle to any other parliamentary group on questions of monetary reform.

"We stand on this issue. We're going to press it. We're going to apply it," he told the national convention of the Young Social Credit Association. "We will always hammer toward the goal we have been talking about."

The leader of the party which will hold a balance of power in parliament said he will press for abandoning the debt financing policy and establishment of a municipal development bank.

FULL SUPPORT

Canada will also give full support to measures designed to lessen the risk of surprise attack or accidental war, he said. Russian leaders seemed for the moment to have paused in their headlong rush to achieve their ambitions, and might be re-examining their policy and perhaps redirecting it.

POSITIVE STEPS

"In the Western alliance we should not only be preparing ourselves for whatever may confront us when Mr. Khrushchev decides to resume his normal diplomatic activities, but we should also be reflecting on what positive steps should be taken by the free world," the prime minister said.

No Survivors in Jungle Shepherds Sight Wrecked Jetliner

BOMBAY (AP) — Police said early Saturday two shepherd boys found the wreckage of a plane believed to be an Alitalia jet-liner that disappeared with 94 persons aboard. They said the wreckage was sighted on a hill in the jungles about 50 miles east of here.

Officers at the town of Junnar reported the body of one man — apparently a European — had been found in the wreckage. They said an Italian lira note was found nearby.

There were no immediate reports of other victims. The police placed the crash site 14 miles west of Junnar.

The announcement came after unconfirmed reports reached the Santa Cruz Airport in Bombay that the wreckage of the Italian DC-8 had been sighted by a truck driver near the town of Khed, about 60 miles east of Bombay. Rescue teams were sent to that area.

Earlier police reported investigators had been sent to Mumbai, about 50 miles in a more southeasterly direction from Bombay.

The big Italian jet vanished Saturday in a monsoon rainstorm moments before it was due to land at Bombay.

There had been fears the plane was down east of Bombay in mountainous jungles inhabited by snakes, leopards, tigers and the Warli and Kalkari tribes, who still use bows and arrows.

JFK, de Gaulle Summit-Bound?

PARIS (UPI) — Renewed speculation of a possible summit meeting between presidents Kennedy and de Gaulle spread yesterday through France.

French officials like the idea of such talks, but said no firm decision has yet been reached.

Possibility of a summit received new impetus from Kennedy's July 4 call for a "declaration of interdependence" between the U.S. and Europe, and the joint appeal by de Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer the next day for speeded-up European unity efforts.

De Gaulle and Adenauer agreed to a "little summit" meeting of leaders of the six Communist-backed nations in Rome in the fall.

Peace Congress

Nikita Planning Major Speech

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Premier Khrushchev will make a major speech next week at the Communist-backed "world congress for disarmament and peace," its organizers forecast yesterday.

They said Khrushchev will probably address the congress, which opens Monday in the Kremlin, on Tuesday or Wednesday. About 2,000 delegates from 120 countries including Canada are expected to attend.

The Communist-sponsored World Peace Council is organizing the congress, which will meet under the symbolic "peace dove" designed by Pablo Picasso and resting on a pile of discarded weapons and flags.

British philosopher Bertrand Russell risked expulsion from the British Labor party to give the congress his support and Canon John Collins of St. Paul's Cathedral, leader of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, is attending.

State of Anarchy Feared by Lloyd

REGINA (CP) — Despite suggestions by Premier Woodrow Lloyd of outside mediation of the fight with doctors over medical care, neither side appeared Saturday to be softening its attitude.

Dr. H. D. Dalgleish of Saskatoon, president of the Saskatchewan College of Physicians and Surgeons, said discussions between doctors and the government can resume only if the controversial Medical Care Act is suspended.

Premier Lloyd, just back in Regina from a surprise two-day trip to Eastern Canada, said he is concerned with what he termed "the outright challenge to the procedures of constitutional government" by doctors.

"If one can envisage this spreading to other groups we would have a state of anarchy," he said.

Both sides held afternoon press conferences in Regina, the doctors first.

STICKING POINT

Mr. Lloyd said that the "sticking point" between the government and the doctors is the college's refusal to accept a plan that includes all Saskatchewan residents and is under administration of a public body.

Mr. Lloyd said he had seen Prof. Frank Scott, dean of law at McGill University, about legal aspects of the medical care insurance plan dispute.

Dr. A. D. Kelly, general secretary of the Canadian Medical Association, told a press conference in Saskatoon Saturday that he sees signs "that conversations will be resumed."

NOT SACROSANCT — The medical care insurance act setting up the plan "does not appear to be quite so sacrosanct as it used to be," Dr. Kelly said.

He said this is indicated by the government's offer to allow the Swift Current health region to administer its own plan under the act.

B.C. Doctors Rapped

Labor Urges Power Probe

The B.C. Federation of Labor has asked the provincial government to probe the "far-reaching powers" of the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons.

In a strongly-worded telegram to Premier Bennett's federalation secretary-treasurer E. P. O'Neal said the request for the review of the college's powers was prompted by the doctor's strike in Saskatchewan.

"Recent events in Saskatchewan indicate the urgent necessity for transferring the life-and-death power which the college wields from the college to the duly-elected representatives of the people," he said.

The labor group pointed out that the provincial government has "already passed legislation prohibiting government employees, police, firemen and hydro workers from withdrawing their service because 'it would not be in the public safety to permit them to do so,'" the telegram stated.

"NOT BY ANARCHY" — "None of these unions... nor any union... ever advocated a strike against the sick, the infirm or children as yet unborn," it continued.

"You will recall... Mr. Premier," the telegram concluded, "that we opposed your restrictive labor legislation, but may we point out that we did so by the process of constitutional democracy, not by anarchy and rebellion."

Dr. James Forrester said there are "serious signs of erosion in morale" at the medical school because of the medical care dispute.

What To Do?

High Test Monday?

HONOLULU (UPI) — Bad weather today caused the fourth delay in a week of the test of a rocket-borne U.S. nuclear device above the Pacific. Test now is set for early Monday. A secret nuclear device was triggered earlier yesterday a few feet off the desert floor in the first above-ground shot of the long Nevada series.

Street Looters 'Like Leeches'

LONG BRANCH, Ont. (UPI) — Looters fled with the furnishings from a meat market and its owner's apartment Friday after bailiffs dumped the goods on the street.

Owner Bill Hassa had gone away, apparently on holidays, when the sheriff's office struck. Police believe the eviction took place for non-payment of rent.

Among the stolen furnishings were a chest of drawers, eral chairs, beds and an electronic amplifier.

A police officer thought

creditors formed most of the crowd, but Randall said they were "just anybody and everybody, a bunch of leeches."

Police will have to wait until Hassa returns to identify his belongings before charges can be laid.

ALL ABOARD

With G. E. Mortimore

MANY delicious tree fruits grow in tropical countries which people of colder climates never taste: The juicy mango, the sharp-flavored papaya, and others.

These are fruits that spoil quickly. By the time they reach here in a boat, they have gone bad.

Why not bring them in by air? Too expensive, people say.

But last week a Victoria department store took a chance and flew in mangoes and papayas from Hawaii, to be sold in the grocery department at the same time a Hawaiian feast was being served to customers in the cafeteria.

Unfortunately, no one in the grocery department knew what mangoes and papayas were. The girls in the department looked bewildered when customers asked the names of those things that had price tags of 59 cents and 69 cents each on them.

"I dunno," said one girl amiably to a customer, "but I'll find out for you."

Anyway, it was a good merchandising idea. Maybe the staff of the grocery department will get into the spirit of it later. If not, it will be just one more good idea that missed fire.

The mangoes and papayas are flavorful and ripe—but they are not everybody's dish. Don't blame me if they taste like Dead Sea apples to you. They're still on sale.

My heart goes out to the workers at a Langford garage who are waiting for parts to arrive for a crippled garage truck. The truck—full of garbage—is mounted on blocks just outside their door. It was on its rounds when it developed mechanical trouble.

After a few more summer days, they could throw a tarpaulin over the back of the truck and let it take off like a balloon.

When One Eye Gets Cataract Other Side Often Does, Too

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I have a cataract in my left eye, and about all I can do is distinguish light from darkness. Is this likely to develop in my right eye? What is the treatment of cataracts?—E.D.W.

When one eye gets a cataract, the other is likely to do so—not always, but usually. However, they don't as a rule develop at the same time or speed. Thus it is possible to correct the poorer eye and have it serviceable by the time it is necessary to operate on the other one.

People with cataracts always should have periodic examination. Removal should be at the doctor's discretion.

Use of glasses makes up for the absence of the cloudy lens. And recently contact lenses have been developed.

Dear Dr. Molner: Can carbon monoxide poisoning leave bad after-effects? My husband got over it but says now he hasn't felt well since then.—Mrs. L.B.

The red cells in our blood disintegrate from 80 to 120 days and are replaced by fresh, new ones. Thus a victim of monoxide will have a complete new supply of blood, long.

devoid of the poison, within three months at most.

Damage to the brain or other organ is possible but I would question it, in the absence of unusual behavior symptoms, this victim suffered any permanent ill-effects.

What's making him "not feel well" is very likely the nervous aftermath of such a close brush with death.

Dear Dr. Molner: I have a grandson, 12, who turns black and blue very easily, even just wrestling with other boys. Is that bad?—Mrs. J.K.

I would have him checked carefully. Possibilities include lack of calcium, some nutritional matter or even some serious defect in the blood, as a lack of enough particles which are necessary for healing.

Can-Can Matches Ya-Ya As a Whistle-Catcher

A long, loud, fervent whistle proved last night that the length of a skirt has little bearing on man's inherent appreciation of women.

The whistle—a noisy tribute to the days of the ankle-length skirt—broke up a near-capacity audience in Memorial Arena last night.

And it proved, if nothing else, that the Ya-Ya skirt is only as effective as the wearer.

HIGH-STEPPING CHORUS
For the tribute was evoked by a high-stepping chorus of Can-Can girls, members of Spokane's nationally famous Silver Spurs dance troupe.

The final night of the International Square Dance Festival, featuring a two-hour program of dances from many lands by the Washington State high school students, drew an estimated 4,500 fans.

They saw a varied program of dancing skill by the Silver Spurs, then a program of square dancing featuring Washington State callers.

The show wound up with an open dance for all square-dance devotees—who turned up en masse in the colorful costumes of their various clubs to take part.

An official of the Vancouver Island Square Dance Association, sponsors of the festival, said the show attracted square dance club members from as far south as San Francisco and as far east as Ottawa.

Calgary Faces Hectic Week

Stampede Warm-Up

CALGARY (CP) — A spirit of abandon gripped the city this weekend amid the traditional warm-up for the opening Monday of the week-long Calgary Stampede.

The world-famous show will open with a flourish before an estimated 150,000 spectators on temporary bleachers along the 30-block route.

The parade is expected to be led by Prime Minister Diefenbaker and representatives of a dozen foreign nations.

Police leaves were cancelled to cope with the expected bumper-to-bumper, horn-blowing traffic jam that characterizes the antics in the Stampede City at this time of the year.

Cowboy Roy Rogers and his wife Dale Evans were to fly in Sunday. Another highlight of today's activities was the traditional breakfast held by Mayor Harry Hays at his nearby ranch.

But the big show will come later in the week when hardened rodeo cowboys and chuckwagon drivers plunge into a gruelling competition for $86,500 in prize money. The buckingest brahma bulls and broncos were in town for the events.

Among the top contenders will be Kenny McLean of Okanagan Falls, B.C., one of the top four riders in North America in the saddle bronc riding event.

McLean, who won the United States rodeo - of the year award last year, has 922 points and is led only by Leo Brown of Car, Alta., who has 1,206.

The Stampede means big business for most of southern Alberta.

Exotic Tests End Menace

FARNBOROUGH, England (Reuters) — A rain-making machine and a gun that fires chickens are some of the exotic contraptions used for testing at the Royal Aircraft Establishment near here.

British aviation scientists are in the midst of a new research program which may yield far-reaching results for both civil and military aviation.

First, they are tackling the problem of keeping aircraft windshields free of flying bodies which can blind the pilot or break the glass.

The most common hazard is rain. With the high speeds of modern jet aircraft, rain-water on an aircraft windshield can form a film which distorts vision and imperils a pilot's depth perception.

Existing windshield wipers, operated by compressed air, cannot function properly at speeds beyond 250 miles an hour, nor can they cope with a heavy downpour below this speed.

With help of a new rain-making machine, British scientists think they now have solved the problem.

Jets of hot air from the aircraft's engine compressors, about one foot in front of the windshield, split the rain into droplets which are then deflected and evaporated by a second jet immediately in front of the glass.

The device was tested successfully in Malaya during last year's monsoons.

One of the most dangerous hazards is birds. A four-pound bird hitting the windshield of an aircraft flying at 700 miles an hour has the same impact as a one-ton truck hitting it at 30 miles an hour.

A "gun" with a 60-foot-long barrel, operated by compressed air, has been built to fire birds at a speed of 600 miles an hour at different types of windshields.

Season Gets Drama

About the only form of entertainment so far absent from Victoria's summer calendar has been the legitimate drama, but this is to be rectified.

On July 20, 21, 23, 24 and 25, the Victoria Intimate Stage will present an arena-style production of John Arden's Sergeant Musgrave's Dance, a new play scheduled for a New York opening in the fall.

In the cast of 15 appearing in this all-American premiere at Victoria College Gordon Head auditorium will be Katie Robertson, Linda Johns, Colin Ross, Horace Mayea, Robert Taylor and Dick Wood. Direction is by Tony Nicholson.

Grain Export Near Record

Victoria's grain exporting figures are expected to reach a new high for the current crop year.

All B.C. ports, including Victoria, Vancouver, Prince Rupert and New Westminster, shipped a total of 177,170,003 bushels during the last 11 months compared with 174,896,770 bushels during 1957-58, the last record year.

Though no figures were available last night an official of Victoria Grain Elevator Ltd. said exports were up from the previous record year.

Total exports from B.C. ports for the current crop year, which ends July 31, are expected to be about 190,000,000 bushels.

Daily Colonist Victoria, B.C., Sun., July 8, 1962 3

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng. (AP) — The Tristan da Cunha islanders have had enough of the harsh delights of European civilization. They want to go home. Homesickness has had a greater pull at their hearts than all the amenities and bright lights of Britain. They prefer their windswept volcano-wrecked island in the south Atlantic. They want to send an advance force of young people to plant potatoes in readiness for a return of their families. Planting deadline is next month. The islanders were chased from their homes by a volcano last October and forced to settle in what for them was a strange, new world. The colonial office has said there can be no question of the islanders going back this year, before the end of the southern winter.

"The beaches were destroyed by the lava from the volcano and we are waiting to see if the tides will alter them," the colonial office said. This reply hardly satisfied Willie Repetto, leader of the islanders. He said: "I speak for all my people when I say we don't like it here and we want to go home. If the colonial office doesn't do anything, we may have to try our own ways and go on strike."

One of the chief complaints here involves potatoes. "Yours are not sweet like ours," Repetto told an Englishman. "Every time we eat one we became homesick."

Demand Fee Increase

Strike Set Monday By Austrian Doctors

VIENNA (AP) — A nation-wide strike of Austria's 13,700 medical doctors has been called for Monday to back up a demand for an increase of fees from the sickness compensation funds, a government-controlled health insurance pool compulsory for all employees.

Only emergency teams will remain on duty in hospitals and first aid stations during the 24-hour walkout.

MAJOR CRISIS

The strike, called by the Austrian chamber of doctors, comes at the height of a major domestic crisis which erupted last week in a series of strike threats from the country's 46,000 postal employees and 26,000 police and gendarmes. The postal employees demanded a substantial service bonus, the policemen an increase of salaries.

The postal strike, called during the absence of Chancellor Alois Gorbach in Moscow, was averted in a last-minute compromise which led to a split in the government coalition.

DEMAND REJECTED

The doctors' strike movement originated in Vienna after the insurance fund turned down the demand to raise doctors' fees by 65 per cent under a new contract.

Doctors throughout the provinces decided to join the strike in support of their Viennese colleagues.

25 CENTS PER CALL

The doctors said their contract fees have been lagging considerably behind, compared with wage increases of other groups.

The doctors said a physician still gets only 6.82 schillings (about 25 cents) from the fund for a call on a patient.

Teen-Age 'Labor Gang' 'Whack in Time' Curbs Juveniles

Willing, Ind. Judge William Obermiller supervises work of teen-age "labor gang" on city beach where he sentenced them to cleaning job each Saturday till Labor Day for drinking as minors. —(AP Photofax).

WHITING, Ind. (AP) — A Whiting City court judge, who punishes teen-age offenders with head shavings, spankings and clean-up jobs, said Saturday he believes a whack in time cuts juvenile delinquents down in size.

Judge William Obermiller believes some teen-agers would prefer to go to jail because they regard jail as a status symbol. On the other hand, Obermiller said, a spanking lowers them in the eyes of their teen-age friends.

"If I feel the youth needs a little time behind bars, then that's where he goes, but I think spanking in court and shaving their heads is, at times, much more effective."

Obermiller believes his type of punishment helps parents regain authority in the home.

"So many kids today feel, 'I am the boss even at home.' When these kids come into court they have chips on their shoulders. When they leave, mom and dad are the bosses again."

Obermiller never orders a spanking unless parents give their permission. None of the parents of offenders have turned him down so far. A policeman or bailiff usually administers the spanking.

U Thant Bids To Conclude Congo Crisis

LONDON (CP) — U Thant served notice Saturday of a new United Nations bid for a final settlement of the Congo crisis involving secessionist Katanga province and the central government at Leopoldville.

The U.N. acting secretary-general told a press conference he wants the Security Council to debate the situation in the next month or two and perhaps give him fresh orders.

He also announced that stalled Dutch-Indonesian negotiations on the future of West New Guinea are being resumed next week.

Tourist Competition

VANCOUVER ISLAND'S tourist industry is expressing concern that this year's massive crop of U.S. visitors is not staying on the island long enough, and is not spending as much money here as was anticipated.

There is no reason for surprise over this because the day when the U.S. holidaymaker was "loaded with dollars" for free spending is over. The average tourist is now John Doe taking his annual vacation with family and trying to crowd into a couple of weeks as much as he can in the most economical way.

This year the visitor to the Pacific Northwest is doing his major spending at the World's Fair, and even in Seattle, where an accommodation problem was anticipated, it is mainly the less costly hotels and motor courts which are holding the no-vacancy signs. Many visitors to Seattle, scared by advance threats of overcrowding, have forestalled trouble by bringing their own trailers.

The moral is that to get its share of the trade the tourist industry must offer good value for money, and have plenty of local attractions to offer the visitor. Those who cater to the tourists are in a highly competitive and selective market.

Victoria is fortunate in having many natural charms to offer but to a fast-moving tourist the best of these can be absorbed in a remarkably short time. This may indeed be the nub of the problem for our tourist industry.

If it can be brought home to the visitor in advance that it takes several days to "do" Victoria and Vancouver Island and see the best of what is to be seen, and that a one-day excursion is completely inadequate, then some progress may be made in the way the tourist industry would like.

More B.C. towns and areas would be well advised to put out brochures suggesting a three or four-day holiday program for intending visitors, packed with ideas and alternatives to appeal to a catholicity of tastes.

Some B.C. communities have excelled in this type of publicity and they have created a stop-over situation where none previously existed.

Record Is Good

INCIDENTS involving troops abroad and the local populace near their stations make the headlines but they should not be exaggerated. In sum total they generally mean much less than they seem.

Publicity was given recently to a British regiment in Germany because of a few court-martial proceedings, and now it is reported that some Canadian soldiers were mixed up in a fracas with German civilians.

Collisions of this nature are to be expected in isolated instances where foreign troops are stationed. Canadians and other Western forces have been in Germany for 18 continuous years. That is a long time, and even if their role has changed from one of occupation to one of mutual defence their presence could be irksome to some degree.

There are always some Germans who don't or cannot easily forget the last war, and there are always a few servicemen prone to rub them the wrong way. Perfection of behavior on either side is scarcely to be expected.

The Canadian service record overseas, however, is splendid, even astonishing in view of their lengthy stay. The troops have conducted themselves admirably and won a respect not to be diluted by occasional incidents where tempers get out of hand.

Opposition Growing

TWO SEPARATE and independent public opinion polls recently conducted throughout the United Kingdom have revealed that opposition to Britain's entry into the European Common Market is growing rapidly.

Both polls—one of which was sponsored by the anti-Common Market Daily Express and the other by the pro-Market Daily Mail—show that the number of people against Britain joining the ECM now exceed the number of people favoring the move.

According to the Daily Mail National Opinion Poll 43.2 per cent of the British people are against joining the ECM, while only 28.2 per cent favor it. Less than three months ago the figures were 47.1 per cent in favor and 25 per cent against.

The Daily Express Poll of Public Opinion registers 38 1/2 per cent in favor, 33 1/2 per cent against and 28 per cent undecided. Four months ago a similar sampling of opinion showed 40 per cent in favor, 24 per cent against and 36 per cent undecided.

The British public's sudden change of attitude is surprising, particularly in view of the fact that most public information media—newspapers, radio and television—have in the main supported Britain's entry into ECM. Only one national daily newspaper—the Express—and one or two provincial journals have opposed the issue.

Further to this the Macmillan government has run a strong campaign urging public support for the proposed move against little, if any, political opposition.

The reasons for the present swing in public opinion against Britain's entry into the ECM are not yet clear—but there is little doubt that the stand taken by the other Commonwealth nations has been an important contributory factor.

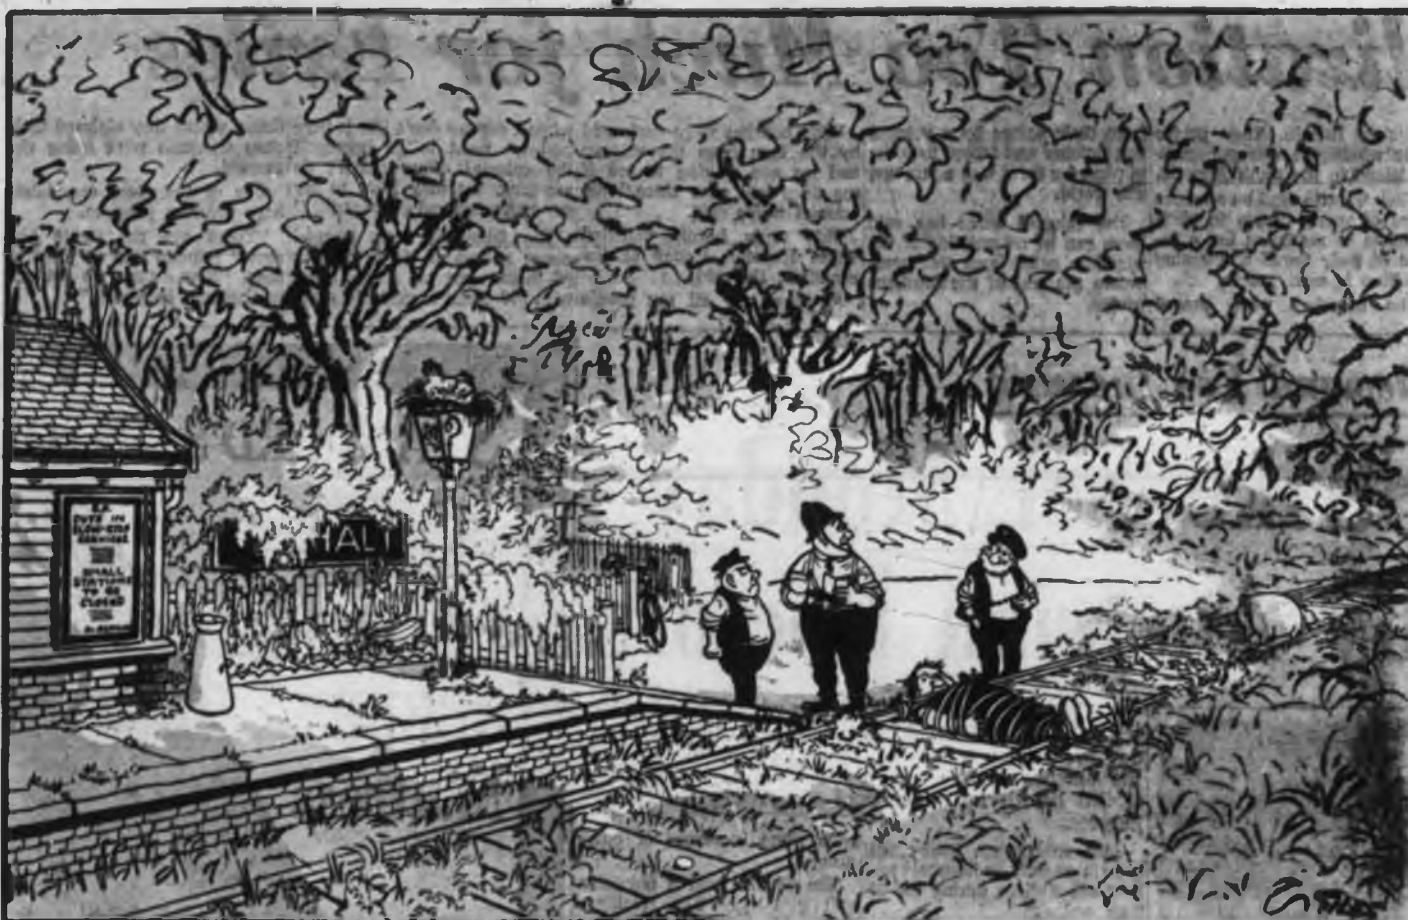

It may yet be proven to Prime Minister Macmillan that the sentimental ties between the family of nations are stronger even than his government.

The Best in Canada

IT IS A SOURCE of much pride to this city that the Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce has been voted the outstanding unit of its kind in Canada, and also accorded first place in several contributory categories: fund-raising, public relations, the best project, international relations and social welfare.

This is a triumph indeed, and the young businessmen who are officers and members of the chamber deserve not only the congratulations of the community, but the gratitude, for some of the lustre of the victory accrues to the city's name.

What now, for instance, of the tired jokes purveyed by rivals about Victoria rolling up the sidewalks after dark and about it being the only cemetery in the country with street lights?

School Prayers Controversy

By MARQUIS CHILDS

AS the outcry over the Supreme Court's decision on the New York school prayer subsidies, it seems unlikely that any positive step will be taken to counter the prohibition laid down in that decision. But in the view of those long concerned over the effect of the church-state controversy on aid to education it could have one dire result.

The only measure providing aid to schools to get through both the Senate and the House is now in conference. The two widely divergent bills cover college education, where presumably the constitutional barrier against assistance to a religious institution does not apply.

The Senate bill provides $300,000,000 in scholarships and in payments to colleges for the cost of those winning the competitive scholarships over a five-year period. It also includes $50,000,000 in grants to public junior colleges for the five years, and $300,000,000 in loans for college construction.

The House bill omits scholarships entirely and simply makes available $180,000,000 a year in grants and $120,000,000 in loans for the construction of college classrooms, laboratories and libraries. What is more, the shrewd chairman of the House Rules committee, Rep. Howard W. Smith of Virginia, exacted a promise from the House conferees that they would not agree to include any scholarships in a possible compromise without coming back to the House for a separate vote on that question.

In other words, the House could knock out scholarships.

As apparently Judge Smith fully expects it would do, without killing the measure entirely.

In the light, however, of the newly embittered quarrel over religion and education, the proposal may die aborning in the conference committee. That, at any rate, is the gloomy prediction of specialists who have seen the whole program of Federal aid to the schools reduced to this one measure.

Others, including some of the conferees, are not so pessimistic. They believe a compromise can be arrived at, particularly since both Senate and House bills provide that buildings put up with Federal money cannot be used for religious or sectarian instruction.

This dispute happens to coincide with the hundredth anniversary of the Morrill Land Grant College Act, which has done so much to support of colleges and universities since Abraham Lincoln signed the measure a century ago.

The act made no distinction between private and public institutions. While no church-supported school has received assistance under the act, Cornell, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and other privately endowed schools have had help.

Furthermore, those hopeful of agreement point to more recent precedents, including the 12-year-old college housing program covering public and private schools.

Recently the Atomic Energy Commission made a research grant of $2,000,000 to Notre Dame University.

Undoubtedly, the dispute over the prayer has stirred passions on each side of the issue. The opinion written by Justice Hugo Black and supported by five other justices simply says that "... it is no part of the business of government to compose official prayers for any group of the American people to recite as a part of a religious program carried on by government." But those on both sides have been only too ready to fasten on the concurring opinion of Justice William O. Douglas.

Douglas expresses what is, in effect, his personal opinion that any aid to church-supported schools, including bus transportation, and any official religious observance, including the prayers in each house of Congress, is of doubtful validity under the Constitution.

For those against all federal help to education, and this would include Judge Smith, the new controversy may be a convenient way to let the college support measures die. They were passed by large majorities, 319 to 73 in the House and 68 to 17 in the Senate.

Once again, the religious dispute to one side, the power of the Rules Committee and its chairman looms on the Congressional horizon as solidly and as implacably as the Berlin Wall. That famous victory whereby the committee was enlarged is seen have been no victory at all. There are those now saying that the late Speaker Sam Rayburn would have preferred a direct frontal assault to remove obstructive members.

But the new President, elected by a hair-line majority, declined to support such a drastic move.

The men who drafted the Constitution 175 years ago could scarcely have foreseen what has happened. The House, with elections every two years, was to be the impulsive, even flighty, body putting forward proposals that the sober Senate would moderate or reject. In practice in recent years just the opposite seems to have occurred.

The Packsack

OF GREGORY CLARK

A DOCTOR friend of mine and I were on our way to a fishing tackle shop when he suddenly took my elbow and drew me to a halt over by the curb on the busy downtown street.

"Take a look at that," he said, quietly, indicating the shop-window facing out to us. It was a new and very fashionable pastry shop. The display in the window consisted of trays of gorgeous cakes, large and small, luscious, colorful, melting to the eye. But we could catch only glimpses of them because of the people standing before the window at gaze.

"Notice anything funny?" asked the doctor.

I failed to do so.

"Except for one fat man," said the doctor, "all the others staring in that window are ladies. And they are all fat!"

He was right. There wasn't a slim one in the six. They were all solid, broad of beam.

"In all but very few exceptions," said the doctor, "fat people are making a public confession, by their shape, of the over-eating they have been guilty of, over the years."

The Defenders

(From The Times, London)

NEWPORT, Rhode Island—The four American 12-metre class yachts will have their first competition of the year here tomorrow. In the opening round of the series of trials which will result in a selection of one of the four to meet the Australian, Gretel, now on her way here on the deck of a steamer, for the America's Cup. Although three of the four are veterans of the America's Cup trials of 1958, in a sense they are starting all over again, since all three have had changes in hull, rig and crew since then.

There is particular interest, of course, in the new sloop, Nefertiti, owned by the Anderson-Purcell syndicate of Boston. She is a departure from 12-metre practice in that she has more beam and less displacement than any 12-metre hull of modern times and her mast is set unusually far back, giving a very large headsail area. Yachtmen who have sailed in her are enthusiastic, but all boats sail fast alone and she will meet her first competition here tomorrow. The designer-sailmaker, F. Hood, and J. J. McNamra, Jr., both fine small craft sailors with limited experience in larger boats, will share Nefertiti's helm.

The other boat from Boston is C. Hovey's Easterner, which did well against her class rivals last summer and has since been altered by a change in the shape of the red keel and by moving the mast aft to get bigger head sails, though she is not as extreme in this respect as Nefertiti. The designer, R. Hunt, and Olympic skipper G. O'Day will be in joint command, with Mr. Hovey, who is 82, on board with the final say on tactics.

Also changed this year is the Mercer Syndicate's Weatherly, designed by P. Rhodes. To overcome some tenderness in strong breezes, she has a heavier and newly-shaped lead keel, her stern has been shortened, and there has been substantial lightening of weight on deck and aloft in the way of winches and fittings. Another change is in her skipper, who will be E. Mosbacher, Jr. Mosbacher sailed Vim in 1958 and Easterner last season, and in both cases got more out of the boats than many people believed possible.

Least altered of all, although her keel has been recast to a sharper mould, is Columbia, the conqueror of Screeper in the last America's Cup match. She is now owned by P. V. Shields and her skipper is his nephew, C. Shields, Jr. She is the only 12 with the same skipper and several of the crew she had in 1961. She has been working out against the old 12-metre Nyala for several weeks. She has some new sails and minor changes aloft. In the pre-trial prognostications Columbia is generally recognized as "the boat the others have to beat."

No boat this year has an all-veteran crew. Most of those who sailed in the 12s in 1958, and since, are sailing again, but they are so scattered among different boats that no one crew can be pointed to as the 1958, or even a 1961, organization. So the next two weeks should tell an interesting story. There are strictly "observation" trials and no final decision will come from them. The boats will meet in the New York Yacht Club regatta in late July and early August, and in the final trial series which starts here on August 15. Except for the crews, there will be match races, the boats sailing in pairs and the pairings varied daily.

Meanwhile, Gretel is reported somewhere at sea, along with her sparring partner Vim, and is expected to be unloaded in New York in about 12 days' time and towed to Luders yards, as was Screeper in 1958, to be rigged and fitted out.

With the Classics

I sift the snow on the mountains below,
And their great pine trees groan
Aghast;

And all the night 'tis my pillow white,
While I sleep in the arms of the blast.

Sublime on the towers of my skyline bowers
Lightning my pilot aids;
In a cavern under is fettered the thunder.

It struggles and howls at fits,
Over earth and ocean, with gentle motion,
This pilot is guiding me,
Lured by the love of the gentle that move

In the depths of the purple sea;
Over the rills, and the crags, and the hills,
Over the lakes and the plains,
Wherever he dream, under mountain or stream,

The Spirit he loves remains;
And I all the while back in heaven's blue smile,
Whilst he is dissolving in rains.

Romance of Our Hymns

Lord Tennyson

By KATHLEEN BLANSHARD

ALFRED, Lord Tennyson, the quality of finely-wrought gold.

Few poets during his lifetime ever gripped Britain as Tennyson did. He could and did rise to great heights of human sympathy and intuition.

It was in the summer of 1859 that the first series of Idylls of the King was given to the world. It met with general acclaim. Within six months 10,000 copies had been sold.

The names Enid, Vivien, Elaine and Guinevere will ever be associated with the Table Round, of which it was said the poet took 30 years before the work was finally completed.

There are two of Tennyson's hymns in our hymn books. They are Crossing the Bar and the one given.

They have their day and cease to be;

They are but broken lights of Thee.

And Thou, O Lord, art more than they.

We have but faith; we cannot know;

For knowledge is of things we see;

And yet we trust it comes from Thee.

A beam in darkness: let it grow;

Let knowledge grow from more to more;

But more of reverence in us dwell;

That mind and soul, according well,

May make one music as before.

But Master: we are fools and slight;

We mock Thee when we do not fear;

But help Thy foolish ones to bear;

Help Thy vain worlds to bear Thy light.

Undoubtedly, the dispute over the prayer has stirred passions on each side of the issue. The opinion written by Justice Hugo Black and supported by five other justices simply says that "... it is no part of the business of government to compose official prayers for any group of the American people to recite as a part of a religious program carried on by government." Once again, the religious dispute to one side, the power of the Rules Committee and its chairman looms on the Congressional horizon as solidly and as implacably as the Berlin Wall. That famous victory whereby the committee was enlarged is seen have been no victory at all. There are those now saying that the late Speaker Sam Rayburn would have preferred a direct frontal assault to remove obstructive members.

But the new President, elected by a half-line majority, declined to support such a drastic move.

The men who drafted the Constitution 175 years ago could scarcely have foreseen what has happened. The House, with elections every two years, was to be the impulsive, even flighty, body putting forward proposals that the sober Senate would moderate or reject. In practice in recent years just the opposite seems to have occurred.

The giant Imperial Airways flying boat Caledonia landed at Bottwood, Newfoundland, after a trail-blazing flight from Foynes, Ireland.

At the same time, Pan-American Airlines' Clipper 111 crossed from Bottwood to Foynes. The test flight was made to show the way for trans-Atlantic service.

The Packsack

OF GREGORY CLARK

A DOCTOR friend of mine and I were on our way to a fishing tackle shop when he suddenly took my elbow and drew me to a halt over by the curb on the busy downtown street.

"Take a look at that," he said, quietly, indicating the shop window facing out to us. It was a new and very fashionable pastry shop. The display in the window consisted of trays of gorgeous cakes, large and small, luscious, colorful, melting to the eye. But we could catch only glimpses of them because of the people standing before the window at gaze.

"Notice anything funny?" asked the doctor.

I failed to do so.

"Except for one fat man," said the doctor, "all the others staring in that window are ladies. And they are all fat!"

He was right. There wasn't a slim one in the six. They were all solid, broad of beam.

"In all but very few exceptions," said the doctor, "fat people are making a public confession, by their shape, of the over-eating they have been guilty of over the years."

America's Cup

The Defenders

(From The Times, London)

NEWPORT, Rhode Island—The four American 12-metre class yachts will have their first competition of the year here tomorrow, in the opening round of the series of trials which will result in a selection of one of the four to meet the Australian, Gretel, now on her way here on the deck of a steamer, for the America's Cup. Although three of the four are veterans of the America's Cup trials of 1958, in a sense they are starting all over again, since all three have had changes in hull, rig and crew since then.

There is particular interest, of course, in the new sloop, Nefertiti, owned by the Anderson-Purcell syndicate of Boston. She is a departure from 12-metre practice in that she has more beam and less displacement than any 12-metre hull of modern times and her mast is set unusually far back, giving a very large headsail area. Yachtsmen who have sailed in her are enthusiastic, but all boats sail fast alone and she will meet her first competition here tomorrow. The designer-sailmaker, F. Hood, and J. J. McNamra, Jr., both fine small craft sailors with limited experience in larger boats, will share Nefertiti's helm.

The other boat from Boston is C. Hovey's Easterner, which did well against her class rivals last summer and has since been altered by a change in the shape of the red keel and by moving the mast aft to get bigger head sails, though she is not as extreme in this respect as Nefertiti. The designer, R. Hunt, and Olympic skipper G. O'Day will be in joint command, with Mr. Hovey, who is 52, on board with the final say on tactics.

Also changed this year is the Mercer Syndicate's Weatherly, designed by P. Rhodes. To overcome some tenderness in strong breeze, she has a heavier and newly-shaped lead keel, her stern has been shortened, and there has been substantial lightening of weight on deck and aloft in the way of winches and fittings. Another change is in her skipper, who will be E. Mosbacher, Jr. Mosbacher sailed Vim in 1958 and Easterner last season, and tri both cases got more out of the boats than many people believed possible.

Least altered of all, although her keel has been recast to a sharper mould, is Columbia, the conqueror of Scripps in the last America's Cup match. She is now owned by P. V. Shields and her skipper is his nephew, C. Shields, Jr. She is the only 12 with the same skipper and several of the crew she had in 1956. She has been working out against the old 12-metre Nyala for several weeks. She has some new sails and minor changes aloft. In the pre-trial prognostications Columbia is generally recognized as "the boat the others have to beat."

No boat this year has an all-veteran crew. Most of those who sailed in the 12s in 1958, and since, are sailing again, but they are so scattered among different boats that no one crew can be pointed to as the 1958, or even a 1961, organization. So the next two weeks should tell an interesting story. These are strictly "observation" trials and no final decision will come from them. The boats will meet in the New York Yacht Club regatta in late July and early August, and in the final trial series which starts here on August 15. Except for the crews, these will be match races, the boats sailing in pairs and the pairings varied daily.

Meanwhile, Gretel is reported somewhere at sea, along with her sparring partner Vim, and is expected to be unloaded in New York in about 12 days' time and towed to Luders yards, as was Scripps in 1958, to be rigged and fitted out.

With the Classics

I sift the snow on the mountains below,

And their great pines groan aghast;

And all the night 'tis my pillow white,

While I sleep in the arms of the blast.

Sublime on the towers of my skyline bowers

Lightning my pilot sits;

In a cavern under is fettered the thunder.

It struggles and howls at fits,

Over earth and ocean, with gentle motion,

This pilot is guiding me,

Lured by the love of the gentle that move

In the depths of the purple sea;

Over the hills, and the crags, and the hills.

Over the lakes and the plains,

Wherever he dream, under mountain or stream,

The Spirit he loves remains;

And I all the while back in heaven's blue smile.

Germans Wallowing in Apology

By John Crosby-Critic at Large

From Berlin

Once noted for his arrogance, the German (if you'll pardon a sweeping generalization) is conspicuously, apologetically apologetic.

You'll notice I sneaked in an apology of my own just now. A fellow gets the habit around here—apologizing for his opinions, his manners, his existence.

Foreigners who live here complain their speech becomes infected with the subjunctive, a groveling usage. If ever there was one: "I would have liked to have spoken to him if this would have been at all possible." This preposterous elaboration where at home you'd say: "Is Joe there? I'd like to talk to him."

In England, I had a German driver taking me to the country. Suddenly he swooped to the side of the road, parked, faced me fully, and embarked on an apology the like of which I have never before heard:

"In my whole life, I have never before done such a thing, sir. I have been a driver here for 10 years and you may ask my employer if I have not a blameless record. I am terribly sorry, sir. Such a thing has never before happened and I promise you, sir, it will never happen again."

His crime? He'd missed a turn, for God's sake!

contributed their labor to the building of the cathedral. German newspapers cried: "This is propitiation for our sins."

In fact, the Germans like to propitiate the sins of their fathers in many ways: German students travel to Israel to help rebuild a country whose people their fathers sinned against so grievously. Young Germans, who were in swaddling clothes when Hitler died, apologize fulsomely for the Nazi regime.

Probably the greatest orgy of mass guilt was "The Diary of Anne Frank," which Germans inflicted on themselves in scores of copies, going to the play and sitting there in silence, experiencing waves of national shame.

I talked to a professor of political science about all this wallowing in apology and he said something very interesting: "The trouble is it's always the wrong people who feel guilty. People who have no cause to feel guilty—many of whom weren't alive in Hitler's time—feel the guiltiest. The ones who have every reason to feel guilty don't."

"I get pretty angry at my students when they say: 'We have no moral right to protest about the wall because of what the Germans did under Hitler.' I get pretty mad. I tell them morality is always a forward thing."

Can't something be done by the sportsmen of Victoria to improve the spawning conditions of trout and salmon? Being a sports fisherman myself I would be willing to donate each year to such a cause. Fishing around the Island isn't nearly as good as it used to be and if something isn't done soon, there will be no salmon left at all.

We know for a fact that salmon spawn is being left to dry up on shores of streams, where for the sake of a little work, and bulldozing it would hatch. Other cases where streams have dried up because of being left bare by logging; the hot sun of course kills the spawn.

There are numerous creeks all around the Island that could be worked on to improve and help the trout and salmon to spawn with success. With the help of every sportsman fisherman there could be a big improvement. Every year there are more fishermen and less fish—most discouraging for the tourist trade too, for one of our main attractions is the fishing. Let's conserve the fishing! More hatcheries are needed too!

Scientific Version

So Adam and Eve are left out of a "newly published scientific version of the Bible, because the whole idea of Adam and Eve won't fit in with evolution."

What next, I wonder. Jesus Christ will not "fit in with evolution" either, so this "scientist" should eliminate Him too. If man evolved he has no need of a Redeemer. The Bible is the word of God; it is about time we stopped tampering with it, and got down to studying it for what it contains—the only answer to all our problems.

Power to Destroy

How much longer can Canadians endure the ever increasing burden of taxes, local, provincial and Dominion. Mr. Diefenbaker fulminated against the group of private businesses raising prices, but what about the B.C. government. With the highest prices in Canada already for one of the civilized amenities which help poor Joe Doakes to carry his tremendous burden, they proceed with greedy haste to raise the price of imported liquor three times higher than was necessary to meet the rise in the tariff. Mr. Bonner will graciously reduce his exorbitant and un-called for increase, but you may be quite sure it will not be reduced to exactly the necessary amount to take care of the increased tariff and depreciation of the dollar.

And, while I am on the subject why have the City of Victoria charged us a full year's taxes for 10 months. Taxes are now paid on July 31, a clear loss to the citizens of two months' taxes. Why isn't the tax collected on Dec. 31, the end of the year instead of six months in advance. The power to tax is the power to destroy. I understand the necessity of the means presently being taken to protect the Canadian dollar, but why was this not done three years ago on the advice of the man who said it must be done and that it could be done without harm to our standard of living, namely Mr. Coyne. Now the brakes have been slammed on and we are all going through the windshield.

Untouchable Breaks India Caste Barrier

By Canadian Press
From Bombay

A man from the Achari, or "Untouchable," caste now presides over the destiny of the National Congress, India's ruling party and the free world's biggest political organization. Forty-one-year-old Sanjeeviah, the party's new president, is the first "Untouchable" to be elected to the high post. Up to now, party chiefs were either high-caste Hindus or Muslims.

The country's 30,000,000 "Untouchables," now called Harijans or "Children of God," a phrase originated by the late Mohandas K. Gandhi, see in Sanjeeviah's unanimous election hopes of the age-old curse of caste tyranny ending speedily. Since independence their condition has improved steadily.

One of Gandhi's oft-expressed hopes was that a Harijan should be able to become president of the Indian Republic.

Sanjeeviah thinks that his election is "symbolic of the ferment of equality sweeping our country."

The millions of Harijans are playing an increasingly significant part in national and provincial politics. All the political parties have begun wooing them. The Communists in particular claim a big following among the Harijans, especially in the south Indian state of Kerala.

Sanjeeviah plans to spread his party's influence among the Harijans, but his major challenge as chief of the ruling party is to revitalize it into, to quote his own words, "a dynamic instrument of democratic socialism." There have been complaints from within the Congress party and outside that it has become complacent and slow-moving.

Sanjeeviah proposes to send thousands of trained workers into villages to spread the message of India's five-year plans and counter the influence of Communist and religious rightist groups.

An experienced and able politician, Sanjeeviah has been chief minister of Andhra State. Until he became president of the Congress party, Sanjeeviah was only a provincial figure. As head of the ruling party he will be able to gather national stature.

UN Debates Economics Of Coffee

Latin America has its sights set on pennies rather than dollars aid.

On July 9, the United Nations has called an international conference to weigh coffee price increases and stabilization.

A one-cent a pound increase in coffee prices means $60,000,000 to coffee-producing nations. Since coffee is the world's largest agricultural commodity, more than 19,000,000 people are directly involved in the UN talks.

Tax Cut and Gold Bennett's Cure For Sick Dollar

By HARRY YOUNG Colonist Business Editor

Two quick-fire cures for Canada's current dollar crisis are offered today by Premier Bennett to the federal government.

The British Columbia premier says,

● Ottawa should immediately withdraw the 15 per cent withholding tax on non-resident Canadian income.

● An increased subsidy, bringing the price of gold up to $50 an ounce should be paid by Ottawa to all Canadian gold producers.

Mr. Bennett advises the federal government to waste no time on removing the withholding tax on foreign income earned in Canada.

The tax which was imposed in December, 1961, as a measure to curb an excessive flow of foreign capital into Canada has done its job and has outlived its usefulness, according to the B.C. premier.

Since Canada claimed this 15 per cent withholding tax on all new Canadian bond issues, the appeal of Canada to the foreign investor has practically disappeared.

"This tax can be abolished by order-in-council," says Mr. Bennett, "and Mr. Diefenbaker should take the step without further delay."

His Other Remedy

Mr. Bennett's other cure for the nation's ills is the creation of a great new stockpile of gold by Ottawa.

"Gold is no longer a vehicle for trading but it is a valuable yardstick," said Mr. Bennett in an interview. "Look how seriously the United States has viewed the drain on its gold reserves and the efforts it has made to stop the flow."

Mr. Bennett continued that every Canadian gold producer should be urged to get the gold out of the ground, and the way to do this is to increase the gold subsidy.

"There are only two countries which have great quantities of unmined gold. They are Canada and South Africa. The opportunity to build up gold reserves without buying it externally is denied to practically everyone else."

Mr. Bennett would like to see as much as possible of the federal reserves in gold, even if it meant the selling of its hoard of U.S. dollars.

Bank of Canada statistics show Canada has kept its gold reserves at just under $1,000,000,000 for the past three years, but the amount has been gradually rising in proportion to the official holdings of U.S. dollars.

Mr. Bennett pointed out that a price of $50 an ounce to Canadian producers would not affect the world wide price of gold which is pegged at $35 an ounce. "There would be no attempt to influence the international price. All the government would have to do is to increase the subsidy it already pays to those producers selling their entire production to the federal government."

One Thing Forgotten

In the paucity of praise that accompany the decision of any company to split its stock, one thing seems to be forgotten. The subdivision of shares makes it more expensive for the shareholder to trade his holding.

The official exchange commission rates for their members are geared in such a way that the smallest percentage is paid on the highest price stocks, and goes up sharply as the value of the share drops.

The commission on a share worth $120 is only 60 cents, but on one worth only $10 the commission is 25 cents a share. The stock exchanges have it this way because they know their members have to go through the same formalities to make a transfer whether the stock is high-priced or low.

In the case of Steel Company of Canada, whose shares were recently split four-for-one, the old commission was 45 cents a share. The new rate for the four shares is $1.20, making it a very much more costly business for those who wish to trade in this particular issue.

Price Out of Range

Many companies like to split their stock when they feel it gets into a high price range because they feel the price is out of the range of the small investor. It also gives them a much larger number of outstanding shares and there are many companies trading with the public who feel it is strongly to their advantage to have as many customer-shareholders as they possibly can.

However, the main beneficiaries of this action are perhaps not so much the shareholders as the investment dealers who get their higher rate of commission on the lower price shares.

Panama Issues Topic of Study

PANAMA CITY (AP) — A joint commission to discuss "points of dissatisfaction" in the Panama Canal treaties was installed Friday. Named by Presidents Kennedy and Charest last month, the commission includes Foreign Minister Galileo Solis and Octavio Fabrega for Panama and Ambassador Joseph Fariand and Canal Governor Robert Fleming for the United States.

It would seem that the democratically progressive Toronto and Montreal Stock Exchanges might be well advised to take a new look at their scale of commissions to see if it is not possible for a more equitable trading percentage to be established.

As the rates stand at present the investor who can afford the high-priced stocks has a very real advantage over those who dabble in the more humble issues.

Pipe Line Plans

More Pumps For Canada

EDMONTON (CP) — Interprovincial Pipe Line Co. plans to build nine new pumping stations and add additional pumping units at two other locations this year in Canada and the United States, general manager R. E. Trammell said yesterday. Cost of the work was estimated by the company at $9,500,000.

The units will increase the capacity of the main line for carrying Alberta and Saskatchewan crude oil to meet growing refinery requirements largely in Eastern Canada, Mr. Trammell said.

In Canada, three electrically-operated pumping stations will be built and a ninth unit will be added at two other locations. Work is scheduled to begin this week.

Outdoor electric pumping stations will be built at Hardisty, Alta.; Loreburn, Sask.; and Bryanston, Ont.

Four More Hearings Set for Chemicals

OTTAWA (CP) — Four more tariff board hearings have been scheduled for the huge family of industrial chemicals.

All will be in Ottawa early next year. Their range runs from photography to the laundry tub.

They are part of a continuing examination of the tariff structures in the chemical group begun last year and are additional to others being conducted by the Tariff Board, which has been expanded into two sections to handle the heavy work load.

SOME PENDING

Aside from appeals and tariff examination in smaller fields, the board in the last few years has polished off the textiles complex. It is engaged still in electronics. Several reports are pending.

The four new hearings are scheduled to begin Jan. 7, Jan. 21, Feb. 25 and March 25.

BA Forms Sulphur Subsidiary

TORONTO (CP) — A new company, Canusulph Ltd., has been formed by British American Oil Co. Ltd. for the export of Canadian sulphur to foreign markets.

Petrogas, which is owned by 28 oil and gas company shareholders, operates a natural gas processing and sulphur recovery plant near Calgary. About 75 per cent of its shares are held by five companies.

Initially the companies participating in the Canusulph will produce about 500,000 tons of sulphur a year.

Prospecting Boom Hits B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The most active prospecting and exploration year in the history of Canada's Pacific Northwest now is in full swing and preliminary reports indicate important discoveries are being made. The B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines reported Saturday.

The chamber estimated that some 60 exploration companies together with more than 300 prospectors, engineers and geologists now are probing for mineral deposits in many outlying parts of B.C., the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Activity in the north was reported at a record level with 25 exploration companies working in the Yukon alone.

Other areas receiving special attention include the Merritt-Ashcroft-Kamloops copper belt; zinc-lead north of Revelstoke; molybdenum in the southern Cariboo and Smithers areas; silver at Alice Arm; copper at Butte Lake and near Tolino on Vancouver Island; iron ore along the coast and islands; nickel southeast of Atlin; gold in the Bridge River and Cariboo and copper on the Skeena River.

The chamber said it had received high-grade gold ore samples from a discovery in the vicinity of Yellowknife, N.W.T. It had reports of extensive claim staking on a hematite iron ore discovery between the headwaters of the Skeena River in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories border.

The chamber added that mineral production this year is expected to reach a record level of upwards of $200,000,000 mainly because the Japanese market continues to stimulate exploration and development activity. Japan imported some $20,000,000 of B.C. mineral products in 1961 and is expected to double that amount in 1962.

Let talk REAL ESTATE

By Jack Meers, F.R.I., B.I. (B.C.)

Real Estate, like every other commodity, cannot be looked at entirely as itself, and the factors causing general trends are many and varied. Furthermore, who affects the area need not apply to another. The factors affecting certain types of properties and not affect others.

Since earlier this year the Dow Jones Industrial Average on the stock market has swung from a top of around 72 to a low around 50. Yet all stocks are not affected to the same extent.

What has happened to Real Estate values in this period? Personally the trend is over so violent in Real Estate, but we are at the moment going through a period of change and readjustment. People's habits are changing, new forms of accommodation are plentiful and it appears that the complete seller's market of the post-war period is a thing of the past. This does not mean that prices of all types of housing are dropping, but it does mean that the market is now becoming highly selective and buyers are needing to be more convinced of value than ever before. For good properties, priced right, offering the right type of accommodation and environment, there remains a good demand.

It is too early in the present period of change to tell exactly which way prices are going, but we like to leave with you the thought that in a falling market, the buyer, whose properties rise in a falling market, some properties fall in a rising market according to supply and demand.

The Car Corner

Refinements Are Welcome

By J. T. JONES

There are no cars more masculine than the Triumph sports models. They make you think of horses and hunting dogs and Harris tweed.

The jolly old TR 2 and TR 3 were bare-faced to the brass cars, and a tremendous performance buy. The TR 3 still is, of course—it's still being made and still selling strongly.

Two other things about the TR 2 and 3: they are homely in their bug-eyed way, and it's possible (but not easy) for some cars (but not many) to heat them through a corner, especially if it's a little rough.

Now we come to the newest of the family, the TR 4.

Let's talk about its looks first. With a bit of clever design by Giovanni Michelotti, especially around the headlights, it carries the family resemblance, but it's an altogether different and much handsomer machine.

And also much more comfortable.

Mechanically, it's an improved TR 3. The same basic engine is used, an overhead-valve four with separate cylinder liners fitted into the block, but enlarged from about 120 cubic inches to slightly more than 130, with horsepower raised to 105.

The engine is set up for power in the middle range, rather than a mighty blast at high revs and not much lower down. For this reason it's less demanding of the driver, too, looking happily through traffic in top gear.

The gearbox, for those who fancy using it to the maximum, is a four-speed, all-synchromesh unit based on the well-proved TR 3 version. The ratios are good and the shifting easy and fast.

Steering is crisp and accurate and light, via rack-and-pinion, and the TR 4 is a delight to set into a corner, especially with all that power on tap.

The ride is a bit improved, partly by an extra few inches of wheelbase and partly by extra weight. This same weight holds acceleration to not far from the TR 3's, despite the extra power. The new model's track has been widened, which helps make the cornering more consistent.

A couple of body refinements are welcome: more room for the people, better weather protection and more luggage space.

The optional hardtop is a real chuckle-builder. Let's see, now. It can be taken right off, of course—even the curved windshield can be unbolted. Or, if you want a sort of semi-convertible, you can take off just the roof, leaving the wrap-around rear window in place. With the side windows rolled up, this means only an oblong hole overhead. Should the rain start coming through that, you can unroll a handy leatherette panel and stretch it into place.

That rear window, cutting off the usual sports car back-draught, ought to make the TR 4 a lot more popular with the lady friend. In fact most of the changes should please the ladies. I haven't heard any complaints from the men, either.

'Ridge Trail' Skims Clouds For 150 Spectacular Miles

Midway between Great Central Lake and Buttle Lake, 6,003-foot Mount Septimus overlooks Cream Lake, Margaret Lake, Love Lake and Della Lake.

The Island Mountain Ramblers club this summer plans to complete the third and final stage of a Strathcona Park mountain exploration program which will see a 150-mile mountain ridge "top of the Island" trail mapped within park boundaries.

Next summer, club members plan to take two or three weeks to make the complete high-ridge circle hike of the park above the 4,000-foot timber line, including slopes of 7,219-foot Mount Golden Hinde, highest mountain on the Island.

Provincial parks branch officials say the club's explorations have been a great help in plans to create a wilderness wonderland in Strathcona Park, made accessible by a series of hiking and riding trails.

July 1 weekend, members of the Island Mountain Ramblers travelled to Buttle Lake and made preliminary explorations up the Elk River Valley to a camp below 7,200-foot Mount Elkhorn. They had a choice of hikes up Mount Elkhorn, or to Volcano Lake at the 4,200-foot level and 2,200 feet above the proposed camp, or Mount Colonel Foster at 7,000 feet, or Puzzle Mountain at 6,000 feet.

These explorations will tie in with a two-week exploration trip July 28 to Aug. 12, which will be the final safari to complete reconnoitering of the high-ridge circle trip.

Club president Syd Watts of Duncan says first stage was completed in 1958 when club members hiked from Courtenay to Della Falls.

Last year they came in from Della Falls north over 5,679-foot Mount Thelwood, down the Myra Valley to Buttle Lake.

This year's cross-country trip up the Elk River Valley to its head, past Mount Colonel Foster, over the high country with its many lakes and alpine ridges, past Mount De Voe to Burman Lake, completes the circle. That will be the first week's program and Mr. Watts will lead the group.

A second-week group, composed of both members of the Island Mountain Ramblers and the Victoria Outdoor Club, and led by Saanich engineer John Cowlin and Hugh Salmond, will fly in from Buttle Lake to Burman Lake to join the first group.

Some of the members will climb 5,760-foot Mount Burman; others will try to climb Mount Golden Hinde, the Island's greatest challenge.

Another hike will be to a series of unnamed lakes west of Burman Lake, where parks officials hope they will eventually establish a central camping development.

Mr. Watts visualizes air drops onto the Forbidden Plateau and Comox Glacier being used to provision hikers making the proposed long circle high-ridge trip.

"The only way to travel Strathcona Park is along the high ridges," he says.

"It is fascinating country," says Mr. Cowlin.

"Once you get to the 4,000-foot level above the timberline, you have beautiful flowered meadowlands up to the 6,000-foot level, where in the Interior you just have the rocks."

"Usually we find the first week in August the best time for alpine flowers . . . and there are hundreds of beautiful ones," he says.

Mr. Cowlin explains that the Mountain Ramblers is not a mountain climbing club of the "hanging by the eyebrows" variety. "Most of the mountains can be climbed by straight walking or scrambling," he said.

Provincial parks branch officials hope eventually to establish wilderness camping spots at places where several mountain trails would meet. At these areas shed facilities would be provided.

Buttle Lake would be key to the Strathcona Park development, and trails to Buttle Lake would lead from Della Falls, Forbidden Plateau and Herbert Inlet to the Moyeha Valley, where Strathcona Parks hits the salt-water Sunlight glints on rocks and water in view along Della Lake.

There are scores of lakes, some of them unnamed, among the mountain tops of Strathcona Park, and some have been stocked with trout.

Some 4,500 feet above Buttle Lake is Flower Ridge, which runs for several miles from 6,003-foot Mount Septimus to a trail which leads down the Henshaw Creek Valley to Buttle Lake.

Price of Happiness

NEW YORK (AP)—Art K. Moss, general manager of an amusement park here has an unusual form of philanthropy.

Every day he makes a habit of deliberately dropping a coin in the street.

Common Market Housewife's Delight

GUATEMALA CITY—Central American housewives are feeling the effects of the Common Market these days. They love it.

Although most of them couldn't tell you what the Common Market is, much less how it operates, they do know this:

Suddenly, there are hundreds of new goods for sale in local stores at prices they can afford.

The new food and household items look so good that the Latin wives are showing a greedy desire to buy, buy, buy.

To North American housewives, used to choosing food and household goods in stores bulging with competing items, this is old stuff. Not so in Central America; or most parts of the world, for that matter.

Until the Central American Common Market started operating in 1960, Central American housewives could buy only products made in their own country, or imports which carried such a high tariff that nobody except the very rich could afford them.

This explains, more than anything else, why Central American diets have remained, for centuries, rice, beans, bananas and coffee.

This is changing. Housewives here owe their improving standard of living to the fact that, in 1960, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua signed a Treaty of Economic Integration between themselves which freed all items for sale within the four countries from tariffs. A short list of exemptions was drawn up for products needing special protection, but this protection will end within five years.

By then, everything the four countries produce will be on sale in all the countries, at free competitive prices. In two years, trade between the four has increased by almost 300 per cent.

Costa Rica, originally a hold-out against the agreement, is expected to join the four treaty countries.

Chips to Newcastle

LONDON—It is reported here that New Brunswick wants to open up a new export market by exporting frozen ready-to-try chips to Britain.

Canadian producers hope to get around Britain's ban on potato imports, by half-cooking the chips which would no longer be subject to ministry of agriculture regulations.

Canadians Anxious to Join Socialist Island 'Paradise'

By ALAN WALKER

LONDON (CP)—Fifteen Canadians have applied to join a Londoner's socialist island "paradise" 70 miles northeast of Australia.

Bernard Stanbury, 33-year-old ex-printer who sold his business and advertised for adventurous people to join him and his wife in their "escape from the threat of an H-bomb war," said only three of the Canadians had passed initial tests conducted by mail.

"I told them to stay in Canada until we could conduct further personal interviews unless

Union Appeals Ban on Strike

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Flight Engineers International Association says it will go into the U.S. circuit court of appeals Monday in an attempt to upset a lower court order prohibiting a strike against Pan American World Airways.

Novel Inspires 'Safe' Utopia

They wanted to take a chance and come anyway. So far none has.

He would not give applicants' names. All are single men. One is a pastry chef, another a teacher and the third an architect.

"We have a shortage of women," he said.

About 140 other successful applicants are gathering in and around Stanbury's 16-room house here while their leader completes negotiations for the 10-square-mile island.

Stanbury refused to give the name of the island — one of several in the area — but said apart from its present owner it is free of humans, snakes and harmful insects.

SOCIALIST SETUP

"I think it is safe to say that most of us are more or less socialist," he said. "At any rate our community will certainly be run along communal lines — equal distribution of property, responsibility and reward."

Every resident will hand over his savings which will be placed in a common fund. If someone wants to withdraw he will get his money back.

There will be as little government on the island as possible. A council will run it. Right-wing applicants were carefully weeded out by mail. Application blanks contained "trap" questions such as: "What kind of a police force do you envisage?"

In all, 3,500 persons applied from Europe, Britain and North America. Many had been impressed by Nevil Shute's book, On the Beach, which showed Australia the last place reached by deadly nuclear fallout after world nuclear war, according to the book, residents of Stanbury's island could hope to live a little longer than their northern neighbors.

The 140 selected to join this "Utopia" will trickle into London steadily until the Autumn exodus. They will work and "practise living together."

Stanbury said he would like to have the three Canadians along, and that he hopes he will soon be able to tell them definitely whether to come.

Butter Powder Produced

MELBOURNE (Reuters)—A scientist working for the Australian government has produced what he believes is the world's first commercial powdered butter.

Though it can't be spread on bread, the powdered butter can be used for cooking in any recipe that calls for solid butter and should prove a boon to housewives in hot climates and, because it can be so easily stored, to commercial bakers, candy-makers and food processors.

LIKE MILK POWDER

The powdered butter was developed by Dr. Paul Hansen, a Danish-born scientist who came to Australia in 1960.

The butter, which can be stored indefinitely without refrigeration, took about a year to develop. It resembles whole milk powder.

Siamese Twins Parted

Puzzled father and proud mother hold daughters Patricia and Prudence after successful operation separated the babies, born Siamese twins. Parents, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Lowe, of San Francisco, took Patricia (held here by father) home one week ahead of her sister, who needed to gain more weight. Last report on twins, now 11 weeks old, was that they were "thriving."

Ferocious-Looking Wolf-Fish Discourages Petting Party

By Cal Smith

If you've ever approached a snarling dog with a view to being neighborly, you'll appreciate my feelings as I lay within two feet of a 20-pound Atlantic wolf-fish "wondering whether or not I should try befriending him."

He lay motionless with his right side toward me, his mouth half opened and showing huge, sharp, canine teeth. Although his appearance did little to inspire confidence, I toyed with the idea of trying to pet him.

I suppose the entire idea was silly, but I'd had two successful encounters with other inhabitants already that day and felt that the wolf-fish's ferocious appearance might easily be belied by a gentle disposition.

In spite of his brutish countenance, he could turn out to be as friendly as the timid jump fish which abound in the area.

But my intentions to make friends faded as I approached and he swung around to face me. Although he made no overt move, his steady stare and bared teeth completely unnerved me and I moved away.

As I left, however, I felt even more apprehensive than before, because I had broken one flipper while entering the water and was swimming with only one leg.

As most marine species are particularly voracious when hurt, crippled, or wounded fellows are concerned, I felt particularly uneasy.

It wasn't hard to imagine the wolf-like teeth sinking into my dangling, finless left foot. I didn't stop looking back until I was well out of his sight.

I'm still not convinced that it is impossible to befriend the wolf fish or even our own wolf-eel. All it would probably require is getting up enough nerve to touch them.

Like snakes and other ferocious appearing beasts, they are feared mainly because of their looks when in actuality they might be less harmful than some of the more pleasant-looking creatures.

On the other hand, I'm not thoroughly convinced that their reputations aren't deserved and I find myself rather reluctant to sacrifice my hand just to prove a point.

For the skindiver who wants a real challenge, however, here is the opportunity.

It would be a far greater accomplishment to pet one of these animals than to spear one. When he can approach a wolf fish or eel and pet it, the skindiver will indeed have experienced adventure!

Kipling's 'Just So' Stories Recorded by Ex-Bogeyman

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER

Boris Karloff has been a bogeyman so many years that it is difficult to hear him cast in a kind role.

Actually Karloff has an assuring and pleasant voice. A few years ago he made an excellent recording of "Peter and the Wolf." Now he may be heard in "The Cat That Walked by Herself" (Cedmon TCH139). This recording also includes "The Butterfly That Stamped" and "How the First Letter Was Written," all "Just So" stories by Rudyard Kipling.

The very small child may not grasp these stories but elementary and high school students will find this record a pleasant means of hearing good literature and grownups should enjoy it too.

Popularity of the spoken word record has made it possible for top authorities to bring valuable instruction into the home. For instance, "Lecture on 'Directing a Play'" by Tyrone Guthrie (Folkways FL984).

Eli Wallach, one of Broadway's finest actors, narrates "Christ in Concrete" (Da Vinci D205), with unusual feeling in another fine spoken word record.

There are many voices on this reading from Pietro D'Onofrio's novel and all of them are Wallach's. Harold Segel's musical background enables Wallach to achieve startling realism.

Selected Singles — "Boy Child by Sonny Martin (Philips 40026), "The Call of Summer" by The Crosby Brothers (Dot 16370), "America" by the Arthur Lyman Group (HIFI-Record H-5057), "Tell Tale" by Anita and The So-and-So's (RCA Victor 47-9050), "It Scares Me" by Ferlin Husky (Capitol 4779), "One Little World Apart" by the J's with Jamie (Columbia 4-4246), "The Land of No Love" by Sheb Wooley (MGM M13079).

These are singers and players for whom the difficult and sometimes subtle nuances of the Viennese operetta are as natural as breathing.

The new conductor of the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf is displaying both his knowledge of orchestral dynamics and his keen sense of Wagnerian aesthetics in a recording of the "Prelude and Love Death" of "Tristan and Isolde" and Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration." The recorded sounds are as gorgeous as the interpretations (Capitol SP8360).

It is interesting to see what venerable Leopold Stokowski chose when he came to record the music for chorus and orchestra under the title, "Inspiration." He chose Beethoven's "The Heavens Are Telling" and "Deep River." There also is the "Evening Prayer" from the opera "Hansel and Gretel" along with Bach's "Jesu, Joy Man's Desiring." There are other contrasts equally broad. Stokowski recorded them with high dramatic effectiveness, using an English chorus and the orchestra (RCA Victor LSC-2583).

Another candidate for enthusiasm is a recording of Johann Strauss' "The Gypsy Baron" with Hilde Gucken, Karl Terkal, Erich Kunz and Anneliese Rithenberger in the principal roles and Heinrich Hollreiser conducting the Vienna Philharmonic and the choral resources of the Vienna State Opera (Angel 3612).

CHRISTINE KAUFMANN

Actress, Linguist, Philosopher—At 17

'Genius' Christine Falls for Tony

By NIELAN GRAHAM

LONDON (NANA)—There has been much talk of a romance between young Austrian actress Christine Kaufmann and Tony Curtis, who separated from wife Janet Leigh after completing the movie Taras Bulba with Christine and Yul Brynner.

Christine, now filming in Germany, receives regular weekly floral bouquets from the Hollywood star.

Young Christine is a remarkable girl, as I discovered when I interviewed her recently.

"My brother and I," said Christine calmly, "taught Tony to like classical music—Beethoven and such, and we introduced him to Dostoevsky. He liked jazz and the usual best sellers of the day, but nothing classical. 'Maybe now Tony will go to a concert occasionally, and read one of the great books. You can't really change anyone, you can only give them a key.'"

Bright words from a 17-year-old! But this girl is bright, and she speaks her mind clearly.

"I have so much to learn," she admits. "My culture is not so well developed that I could let it stand still. Everything in life is so much on the outside. The real value is inside."

Christine speaks German, French, Italian, English and Spanish.

When Christine travels, which is practically all the time, she takes notes. "The big difference between the Germans and the English," she told me, "is that the English have a better sense of humor—except in Berlin. Berliners are like the English; they have a sense of humor and, like the English, laugh at situations and themselves."

"I didn't like Paris," continued the young actress. "The people are superficial and insecure, trying to be different than they are."

"I live in Rome and Munich," she continued. "I have an apartment in both cities. Rome is like being in a beautiful shell—it has a different mood every night. I'm not so fond of Vienna. I have a feeling they have nothing but whipped cream on their minds."

"I met Elizabeth Taylor," Christine confided. "I think she's a sweet child (Liz is almost twice as old as Christine). But I don't consider her beautiful. Beauty is not just on the face, beauty is from inside. 'My mother handles all my business. I have many projects but I don't worry about them.'"

Christine concluded that she doesn't care for comedies and "I don't drink; I don't care to work. I smoke two cigarettes a day; I adore Audrey Hepburn and Ingrid Bergman. I love Lee Remick, and I like mostly older actors like Cary Grant and Laurence Olivier."

"I like to make movies, but I'm not going to make movies all my life—it's too unproductive. One day, when I have enough money, I would like to do photography. I also paint, but badly."

The Entertainment Parade

All City's Summer Shows Rolling Along Successfully

By BERT BINNY

One new summer show starts this week: all the others have settled down and are rolling along merrily.

The International Film Festival has three more good programs Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, 8 p.m. in Beacon Hill Park.

City of Gold, Pierre Berton's reminiscences of his boyhood days in Dawson City, is on tomorrow and Three Seasons, a delightful English picture, appears Tuesday.

Another English film, Beauty In Trust, showing on Wednesday, is also excellent. These three are specially recommended.

Soloists with the Arion Male Chorus at the Butchart Gardens tomorrow evening are soprano Sally Seymour, a Rose Bowl winner, Jim McVie and Hugh Ross.

With the Vera Barclay Singers on Wednesday are Wendy Cox and Margaret Christison, along with John Dunbar and duettists Vera Barclay and Chris Saunders.

Musical variety by the nationally known Hometowners fills the bill on Friday.

The live entertainment at the Fox this week will be provided by magicians Carl and Lottie Hemeon and comedian Reg Stoler.

They are the added attractions accompanying the bill of old, silent movies and theatre organ music by Reg Stone.

Fantasy Theatre's Summer Showcase opens at the Sirocco on Wednesday.

Directed by Cliff Clarke and Tony Wilkins, the show takes the form of a cruise to various exotic parts of the world and affords a peek at the sorts of entertainment to be expected there.

The 10th annual Smile Show is off to a really booming start.

By the fourth night eager patrons were being turned away, a state of affairs which, experience has shown, usually requires at least a month to achieve.

The Victoria Symphony Orchestra's tentative program lined up for Beacon Hill Park at 3 p.m. on Sunday, July 15, is bright and interesting.

This concert, to be conducted by Capt. James Gayfer, is sponsored by the Musicians' Recording Trust Fund and Victoria Local 247, A.F. of M.

If the weather proves adverse the show will go on at 9 p.m. at the Victoria College auditorium, Gordon Head.

Berlioz's Hungarian March is the opening item, followed by the Overture to Die Fledermaus (J. Strauss); Brahms' Hungarian Dances, Nos. 5 and 6; and Handel's Royal Fireworks Suite. The soloists will be violinist Julia Hunt with Sarasate's Gypsy Airs and soprano Anne Harris with selections from The King and I (Rodgers and Hammerstein).

Anne Harris also appears in the second half with items from Edvard Grieg's Song of Norway.

The program is to be completed with a famous Strauss waltz, Roses from the South; Borodin's Polovetsian Dances; and a Heifetz arrangement of Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D major, with orchestration by Adolf Schmidt.

A recent general meeting, with record attendance, elected officers of the Victoria Theatre Guild for the coming season.

President is Gerald Guest, with Allan Purdy as vice-president. The secretary is Connie Thompson, and Flo Williams is treasurer.

Shoestring Effort Succeeds

Barber Sold His Horse To Stake Film Producer

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Recently a packed audience applauded a haunting movie about displaced American Indians, The Exiles.

Part of the subscription series of film classics, this was the first commercial showing in the United States of the remarkable motion picture put together by a group of young men trying unsuccessfully to break into the movie business.

BURNING DESIRE

The man who made The Exiles is Kent Mackenzie, tall, intense, with a shock of black hair. He got out of the air force eight years ago and came here with the burning desire to make movies.

Five years ago, Kent was researching for a documentary on Indian reservation life. He became acquainted with some young Indians who had drifted to Los Angeles to take up a purposeless life on the fringes of skid row.

BETTER SUBJECT

Kent saw their existence as a better subject for a film, and he started shooting some footage, with the Indians' co-operation. The project started to grow.

"At first I operated on my own $500," he recalled. "When that ran out, I started showing the film to people in hopes of backing it."

$2,000 TO SPARE

"One fellow, who was going into the army and who later became my brother-in-law, said he had $2,000 he didn't need. That kept us going for about five months. Then a woman saw the film and said she would contribute the money she was going to spend the next day on a new sports car."

"My barber, who is 85 years old, saw what we were up against. He said he had a race horse he would sell and give us the proceeds."

FOUR YEARS

After four years of filming, The Exiles was finally finished. The cost: $27,000 in actual cash, $45,000 in the deferments by those who helped make it were paid.

Unlike other local productions, the cast cost was not a major item. The actors, all amateurs, were paid off in beer and wine.

WASTED LIVES

That's the nature of The Exiles. It tells how the young Indians spend their hours watching all-night movies or television, guzzling beer and wine, playing poker and driving their cars to a hilltop overlooking the city, where they fight, make love and chant and dance like their ancestors.

Young City Dancers Win Medals in East

Two young highland dancers from Victoria are currently testing their talents against competition in New York State as part of a tour during which they will compete in 11 meets and spend three weeks in Nova Scotia studying highland dancing.

Gloria Smith, 13, and Angus MacKenzie, 16, are travelling with Mrs. Heather Duncan Jolley of Ottawa, recently their dancing teacher at the Duncan Dance School operated by her mother in Victoria.

SCHOLARSHIPS
They are in the east primarily to take advantage of scholarships to three-week summer courses at the Gaelic College on Cape Breton Island.

They won the scholarships at the Victoria Dance Festival in April when Gloria, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Smith Jr., 301 Robert St., won the Vancouver Island senior open championship, with Angus, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. MacKenzie, 1912 Allenby, runner-up.

WON MEDALS

In a meet June 23 at Grimsby, Ont., Gloria won a second-place and a third-place medal doing the scann triubhas dance and the Highland Fling, and Angus earned a first for his jig and a third for his hornpipe.

The pair, at present competing at meets in New York State, are due to return to Victoria in September.

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The United Aerospace Workers and International Association of Mechanical Workers announced a strike against major U.S. aerospace companies across the country would be called July 23 unless new labor contracts are signed by that time. A total of 51 plants, test sites and missile bases may be struck.

Top-Ranked Junior Wins Regional Tennis

Montreal's Andre Tielemans, by defeating Bob Bardsley, Canada's number one ranked junior, Saturday won the Pacific junior regional tennis championship at Victoria Lawn Tennis Club in the under-18 class by defeating Victoria's Don McCormick.

Tielemans, who held a 53 lead, lost the first set 7-5 but came back to defeat McCormick 6-2, 6-4.

In the girls' under-18 singles, Fay Urban of Windsor upset Vickie Berner of Vancouver. Miss Urban, who is ranked second to Miss Berner nationally, defeated the Vancouver player 6-2, 6-3.

Vancouver's Bob Moffatt repeated his victory of last year in the boys' under-16 division against Al Skelton and Tony Bardsley, both of Vancouver. Tielemans and Piers won the match 3-6, 6-4, 11-9.

On Friday, Theodora Booker of Oak Bay Tennis Club won the girls' under-14 singles, defeating Janice Trindle of Vancouver, 6-1, 6-3. Robin Elliott beat Mike Bolton, 6-1, 6-0, in the all-Vancouver under-14 boys' singles final.

England Defeats Pakistan Again

LEEDS, Eng. (Reuters) — England beat the Pakistan cricketers by an innings and 117 runs at Headingley Saturday, proving all-round superiority by winning with two days to spare for the second time in the three-test series. England has won all three tests.

Pakistan cut a sorry figure in both innings on an easy-paced pitch too slow to give bowlers much help—losing 17 wickets for 238 in just under six hours.

First it lost its remaining seven first innings wickets for 58 in 90 minutes, and then, following on 297 behind, was dismissed for 180 in four hours, 10 minutes.

Apart from a fourth wicket stand of 73 in 100 minutes between Aftab-Ul-Din (69) and Saeed Ahmed (54), there was little resistance to the England attack in the follow-on.

CAPTAIN HURT
Pakistan, already weakened by injuries, had a further setback when captain Javed Burki hurt his right knee ligaments after being struck by Brian Statham.

In each innings he had to be helped off the field and though returning bravely, was out immediately both times.

Close-of-play scores in other cricket matches:
At the Oval, Surrey 351 for 8 declared; Kent 18 for 3.
At Bath, Somerset 375 for 5 declared; Nottinghamshire 38 for 1 wicket.

At Old Trafford, Gloucestershire 220; Lancashire 60 for 3.
At Westcliffe, Yorkshire 229; Essex 53 for 2.
At Cardiff, Glamorgan 285; Sussex 19 for 1.
At Portsmouth, Hampshire 373 for 3 declared; Derbyshire 47 for 2.
At Northampton, Northampton 408 for 2 declared; Cambridge University 32 for 2.
At Worcester, Worcestershire 59 and 30 for 2; Warwickshire 125.
At Leeds, the two-day match between Essex and Harrow ended in a draw. Harrow 247; Essex 119 and 243 for 1.

B.C. Junior Side Finishes Second

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — British Columbia's junior cricket team scored an overwhelming victory over Manitoba Saturday but the Canadian interprovincial championship went to Ontario as the eastern team scored an equally convincing win over Quebec.

The results left B.C. in second place in the final standings, a point ahead of Quebec.

B.C. bowler Bruce Pounder tore through the Manitoba batsmen to take seven wickets for 10 runs and the prairie team was all out for 30.

B.C. batsmen then passed the Manitoba total with the loss of only two wickets. Don Englewood, with 14 not out, had B.C.'s highest score.

LADIES' SINGLES tennis title at the all-England tournament at Wimbledon went to Mrs. Karen Hantze-Susman, 19, a newly-wed from Chula Vista, Calif. She beat Czechoslovakian housewife Mrs. Vera Sukova, 6-4, 6-4 in less than an hour. Mrs. Sukova was handicapped by an injured ankle, suffered the day before the match ... Mrs. Susman

Tom Dixon Wins Bowls

Tom Dixon of Nanaimo won back the Peace Cup and the Vancouver Island singles lawn bowling championship at Beacon Hill yesterday, beating clubmate Al Kirkham, 15-6, in the final.

Dixon, the 1959 champion, beat Ed Beattie of Victoria, 16-12, and Kirkham downed Fred Durick of Victoria West, 15-10, in semi-finals.

OUTDOORS with Alec Merriman

During the past week British Columbia's outdoors fraternity has said "goodbye and good luck" to provincial fish and game branch director Frank Butler, who retired July 4 after more than 48 years service to hunters, fishermen and trappers in British Columbia.

He is the man who has been largely responsible for B.C.'s existing progressive wildlife administration, and although he himself was a practical man rather than a scientist, it was under him that the fish and game branch built up its highly respected section of game and fish biologists.

He was the man who was able to blend the practical with the scientific ... the man who was able to keep practical sportsmen happy, and yet go along with what at the time seemed to sportsmen to be radical ideas of biologists.

It wasn't always an easy task, because hunters and fishermen in the field reacted to local conditions and were not, and in some cases still are not, ready to go all the way with the ideas of the biologists.

Butler was a proponent of inter-provincial and international co-operation for efficient conservation practices and always supported, in theory and practice, the interchange of ideas between contemporaries in other parts of the province.

In the field, he was well known for his frequent visits to fish and game clubs, and his ready ear to the problems of hunters and fishermen, sometimes to the consternation of his workers who were impatient to get on with a project, with which sportsmen didn't see eye to eye.

Butler was born in Victoria in 1897 and joined the game department in 1914, served overseas in the army, and returned home to become secretary of the game conservation board in 1919.

He became a staff-sergeant in the B.C. Provincial Police in 1926, and became one of a three-man game commission in 1934.

His service embraces almost all of the wildlife conservation program in B.C.

Assistant director James Hatter, a former Lake Cowichan boy, who attended Victoria College and graduated with honors in zoology from UBC, carries on as head of the fish and game branch.

Along with Frank Baker, we have been experimenting with drift mooching in Finlayson Arm waters, and up to now have landed a couple of small salmon, a couple of ling cod more than 20 pounds each, a dozen or so smaller ling cod, some bass, red snappers and rock cod ... and of course too many dogfish.

We have also had a couple of big salmon on, one up to the boat before we lost it, and of course there is the 18:14-pounder in which guide Jim Gilbert found our plug cut herring.

We thought it might be the answer for those who don't like wire line fishing.

For salmon it hasn't been too productive.

But, for fish and chips it has been a lot of fun.

Mostly the water is too deep to make for good mooching. The line gets out so far, you can't feel the action.

But, if you get in close to the shore, in the shallower area where the trollers can't reach, it is fairly feasible.

Saanich Inlet anglers frown on moochers ... In fact VSIAA rules forbid straight mooching, but our system is really a very slow troll, much the same as some of the Inlet regulars fish, but we use nylon line and four ounces of weight instead of wire line and two to five pounds. Our motor is always running, mostly we are moving ahead, but we slip into neutral to allow the lines to sink to the bottom.

This is not the same kind of still mooching that makes a bottleneck in Cowichan Bay. The boat is in motion all the time.

Our observations so far would indicate trolling is the best method to catch salmon in the Inlet, but there are a few spots where mooching could pay off and would not hinder troll fishermen.

For the person who wants fish, but has had no luck salmon trolling, drift mooching provides good diversions, with cod almost a certainty and a salmon a possibility.

We use plug cut herring, about six feet of leader with a sliding hook set up, and a three or four-ounce rudder weight.

If you have difficulty tying a sliding hook, try pinching a small split weight below the sliding hook and it will work as a sliding check.

Herring strip, with or without a Strip-Teaser, or a Minnow-Teaser or Krippled Minnow will work fine.

To plug cut herring take a six to eight-inch frozen herring, place it on a board with back towards you and head to the left. Cut just below the head on a bevel. Clean the herring, and the hole in the belly provides the action. Hook the sliding hook through the high side of the cut and the lower hook towards the tail.

You need a slow roll for springs and a fast tight roll for coho. Anything catches cod and dogfish.

Drop the line to the bottom, pick it up three or four feet, slip the boat motor to forward and let the line rise to close to the top, slip the motor in neutral, let the line sink, and repeat.

Biggest spring salmon ever entered in the King Fisherman contest from these waters was a 55-pounder from Becher Bay, landed two years ago in July by Len Duncan, who was drift mooching off the kelp beds.

Garden Notes

Destroy to Produce

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRBS

SWEET PEAS — (R.W.S. Crofton). Sweet peas respond to regular cutting; the more you keep the flowers cut, the more will form. Cut with a sharp knife or scissors, as this tears a strip of "bark" or skin from the main stem or haulm.

Keep a sharp lookout while working around your sweet peas for aphids clustered near the growing tips of the vines. Spray with Black Leaf 40 in soapy water or with malathion.

STRAWBERRY BEDS — (G.M., Victoria). The practice of burning over the strawberry beds after cropping is not injurious to the plants. I am very much in favor of this treatment. After the fruit is finished, I loosen and shake up the straw with a fork to let the air in and to dry off the straw.

A few days later, preferably when there is a gentle breeze blowing, I set fire to the straw on the windward side, allowing it to creep across the bed. Thousands of slugs, insect pests and disease spores are destroyed in this way. Better check with your fire department before setting the fire—you may need a permit.

KOHL-RABI CULTURE — (J.R.C., Sidney). It most certainly isn't too late to put in seeds of kohlrabi. In fact, seeds of this excellent vegetable may be sown any time from early April right through until the middle of August, and it is a good idea to make succession sowings in order to maintain a continuity of supply. Sow in drills 15 inches apart and half an inch deep and, when the seedlings appear, thin them out to stand 10 inches apart.

You don't lift and store kohlrabi as you would turnips, but leave them in the soil through the winter, pulling enough for immediate use as required. The green varieties have a better flavor than the purple ones.

MAGNOLIA PROPAGATION — (R.D., Victoria). The leafy stem sent me for identification is magnolia grandiflora. You could take cuttings toward the end of this month if you wish, but this is a slow and very uncertain method of propagation.

You could get a new plant from the parent magnolia much quicker by layering a low branch—cutting a nick in it and burying the wounded portion in a mound of soil.

CONFUSED HYACINTH — (H.L.J., View Royal). The reason why your hyacinth has bloomed twice in a single year—once indoors in a pot and once outdoors in the garden—is because the bulb has had its natural sense of the seasons destroyed by being held in cold storage to make it bloom during the winter months.

Right now, that poor bulb is so confused by this retarding treatment it doesn't know whether it is spring, summer, fall or winter. It will recover its sense of timing, however, and will bloom in May hereafter. The bulb will be of no further use for potting up as a houseplant, but will do fine if left out in the garden.

POACHED EGG FLOWER — (N.E., Victoria). The plant you call Irish primrose is actually Linanthus Douglasii. I have never heard the nickname Irish primrose used before, and the plant is more commonly called meadowfoam or poached egg flower. It is a native of the Pacific coast and was discovered by David Douglas in 1833 during the same plant-hunting expedition in which he gave the world the Douglas fir.

It is a low-growing annual flower, about eight inches tall, with sprightly yellow and white flowers very attractive to bees.

SHEILAH GRAHAM in London

Off with Old, On with New

LONDON (NANA) — The Michael Wilding divorce hits the British courts within the fortnight. But if 844 Laif wants to pop the question to the attractive blonde Susan Wilding he will have to wait a year for his California divorce from Judy Garland to become final.

The same goes for James and Pamela Mason. Since he announced divorce plans, I've heard rumors that Ann Todd is now the No. 1 girl in his life.

Robert Preston told me that Warners expect to make at least $100,000,000 on his "Music Man" movie. . . John Huston has "sold" Jose Ferrer on making a movie in Ireland.

Jose is hurt because when Rosemary Clooney visited London a couple of weeks ago he phoned her and phoned her and she left town without seeing him or even exchanging a word on the telephone. He's still mad about the girl, and wants to go back home in spite of the divorce.

What's this I hear all the way across the Atlantic that there is a separation between Gloria Vanderbilt and her husband, director 844 Lumet?

From this distance, I find it hard to believe that George Hamilton is seriously interested in 16-year-old Sue "Lolita" Lyon. Or she in him. He's 24 or 25 and that, to a girl of 16, should be an old man, for heaven's sake.

The cycle of success: Susannah York, for her first movie, "Tunes of Glory," was paid $1,500 ($4,200). For the next, "Greengrass summer," Susan's salary was $3,000. John Huston jumped her to $25,000 for "Freud." And now Susan is getting $40,000—slightly more than $100,000—for "Tom Jones." All in the space of two years.

The Charlton Heston-Ava Gardner-David Niven movie started last Monday, and you will see it in the theatres next March.

LET'S TALK

By Rudolf Flesch

Henry Miller is, according to some, the greatest living American writer; to others, a crackpot not worth talking about. He used to live in Paris and wrote a whole string of books that had to be smuggled into the U.S. because they were all banned.

Now Tropic of Cancer has been published here as a paperback and is a big hit where it's not banned—and it's extremely dirty.

Nevertheless, there's Miller. He's now living in Big Sur, Calif., the centre of a sort of cult, and what has this man got? A good place to find out is a recent collection of his essays, Stand Still Like the Hummingbird (New Directions). It's about as thorough with the gospel as a Henry Miller and, whether you like it or not, you have to admit it's a consistent and noble philosophy. I quote:

Give Your Cloak

"Jesus made a number of explicit statements, injunctions really. All to the effect that one was to take no thought but to respond immediately to any appeal for aid. And to respond in large measure. To give your cloak as well as your coat, to walk two miles and not one. And as we know well, with these injunctions another, more important one—to return good for evil. 'Resist not evil!'"

"Throughout the parables of Jesus there is implicit another most wholesome idea, that we are not to seek trouble, not to go about trying to patch things up, not to endeavor to convert others to our way of thinking, but to demonstrate the truth which is in us by acting instinctively and spontaneously when confronted with an issue. To do our part and trust in the Lord, in other words. . . ."

"In these last years at Big Sur I found a place in my own native land which I could call 'home.' Living in this remote corner of the world, I came to discover that one can be 'out of the world,' as they say, yet closer to the earth and all creation."

Peace with Myself

"For the first time in my life I was giving myself the chance to live the life which every sincere, sensitive, well-meaning individual desires to live. Living apart and at peace with myself, I came to realize more vividly the meaning of the doctrine of acceptance. To refrain from giving advice, to refrain from meddling in the affairs of others, to refrain, even if the motives be the highest, from tampering with another's way of life—so simple, yet so difficult for an active spirit! Ha! Ha! off! Yet not to grow indifferent, or refuse aid when it is sincerely demanded. "Even from the purest of motives one has not the right to molest another. The effort to bring a man to God, or to bring him enlightenment, is an act of violation. It is even more reprehensible than to subjugate him bodily. Does not the whole art of living centre about the practice of tolerance, of noninterference? Before it is possible to love one another, as we are so often enjoined, it is necessary to respect one another, respect the privacy of the soul."

Ghosts Haunt Britain

By MARGARET BRENTHALL

Tales of ghosts and phantoms abound in Britain. There are houses in many parts of the country with a well established reputation for strange, inexplicable presences.

There is the mad little Green lady with her child at Crathes Castle, Kincardineshire; the unpleasant Lady Hoboy of Blaham Place, Berkshire, who murdered one of her children and has been seen since, many a time, trying to wash the blood from her hands at the scene of her crime.

And at Raynham Hall, Norfolk, there is the Grey Lady, who can claim the special distinction of having been photographed.

PRESERVED SKULL
One of the most haunted houses in Britain is said to be Burton Agnes Hall, near Bridlington, Yorkshire. It is a stately Tudor mansion, in the Great Hall of which is preserved, on her instructions, the skull of a girl who died 300 years ago.

On one occasion when the skull was removed from its niche behind the panelling, it was restored to its rightful place with the utmost haste.

But Burton Agnes Hall is a house where strange things tend to happen, even when the skull is in its customary position.

There are a number of ghosts at Levens Hall, near Kendal, Westmorland, an ancient zanted house whose earliest part dates from the 12th century. The most notorious is the Grey Lady, who haunts the drive and whose main activity is to alarm visitors by stepping in front of vehicles as they approach the house.

The Grey Lady was last seen quite recently when a member of the Bagot family (who own Levens Hall) bicycled through her.

CONDEMNED TO PLAY
Glamis Castle, Angus, ancestral home of the Earl of Strathmore and the birthplace of Princess Margaret, is a place that has always been surrounded by a strong element of mystery.

One ghost of Glamis is the tormented spirit of Earl Baedie, said to have staked his soul in a card game with the devil, and having lost, was condemned thereafter to play for evermore.

Where this marathon card game takes place is another mystery: it is a tradition that if you count the windows of Glamis, both from inside and out, your numbers will never tally, and that somewhere within the castle is the lost room where the doomed card player continues his endless game.

USEFUL GHOST

There are records of ghosts whose soul and useful purpose was to reveal a hidden object. Such was the 18th century apparition of Powis Castle, Montgomeryshire, a man in a gold laced hat and waistcoat who appeared repeatedly until, at last, he succeeded in persuading someone to carry out this instructions. She was a simple woman who was working at the castle.

The apparition led her to a neighboring room where, on lifting the floorboards, a heavy locked box was discovered; the key, too, was revealed in a crevice in the wall. The apparition was adamant in his terms: the box and the key were to be dispatched to the earl in London, and he would then appear no more. His instructions were obeyed, and the woman received a handsome reward from the earl that she never had to work again.

CAPTAIN O. P. JONES WITH CLUB MEMBER

Young Canadians Lead World In Number of Jet Miles Flown

Canadian youngsters seem to do more flying than other children in the world.

According to the records at British Overseas Airways headquarters, more than 13,000 Canadian children have become members of the airline's Junior Jet Club.

Comparing on a population basis, that's the highest proportion of members in any of the more than 50 countries in the world served by BOAC.

The airline started the club in the late 50s to encourage that seemingly natural enthusiasm most youngsters have for aviation. Many of the early teenage members who have now reached adulthood still maintain their Junior Jet Club log books.

Here's how the Junior Jet Club works. Every youngster who boards a BOAC airplane is asked by one of the stewards if he or she is a member.

If he's not already a member, he receives a hard-covered log book and a pair of golden wings, just like the pilot's, that can be pinned to a coat or dress.

Later during the flight, the captain of the aircraft enters an item in each youngster's log book recording the flight, date, time and distance, then signs his name.

KEPT UP TO DATE
A member of the jet club keeps his own log book of course, and on subsequent flights new entries are made by the captain in giving a permanent record of the member's total flying time up to date.

There are members of the Junior Jet Club who have flown hundreds of thousands of miles.

IDEAL CHAIRMAN
BOAC chose an ideal chairman for its jet club. He is the almost legendary Captain O. P. Jones. Jones is now retired from active flying but his career spanned a period in aviation from the old days of wood, canvas and piano wire right up to the jet age.

Back in the 20s he was pilot on the first royal flight when the Prince of Wales flew from Paris to London in 1923; he flew the Empire flying boat of BOAC's forerunner, Imperial Airways, in the 30s and he became well known to many Canadian flyers crossing the Atlantic in the Second World War when Ferry Command was organized.

St. Peter's Home In Rome Found?

ROME, (UPI) — Archaeologists have discovered what they believe to be the ruins of the house where St. Peter lived as guest of a Roman senator.

The discovery came during repair and restoration work under the floor of the little Church of Santa Pudenziana, one of Rome's finest and most ancient Christian churches.

Tradition says the church was built on the site of the palace of Senator Pudens, who according to tradition was converted by St. Peter and whose house was the meeting place of the first Christians of Rome.

Experts say there are indications that ruins found under the floor of the church belonged to the palace of Pudens.

Canada Exports Homes to Germany

Many More Lose Homes

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The government for the first time officially expressed concern last week over "the rising number of home foreclosures."

The census bureau said that, "prompted by the concern," it would make a survey of recently foreclosed mortgages to find out why homeowners could not keep up payments.

BURLINGTON, Ont. (UPI)—A shipment of Canadian factory-built houses will leave this week bound for West Germany.

The Halliday Company Ltd. says the site for the first prefabricated house is a village in the Tannus mountains near Frankfurt. A special team of German tradesmen will erect it.

Selling price of the houses will be about $18,000. The company's vice-president and general manager, G. E. Gordon, said Scandinavia exported a similar type of building to Germany but they sold for about $28,000.

He visualized no difficulty in selling more than 100 of his firm's houses this year.

Although there are many features uncommon to the German public, the company says most Germans consider Canadian homes well built to stand up to frigid weather conditions.

SUN CITY, Ariz. — In an era when segregation is a particularly unfortunate word, this young town of older people likes to call itself segregated. Here, the word refers not to race, but to age.

Sun City was the bellwether among Western retirement communities, and it seems time to declare it an almost unqualified success.

Some sociologists have expressed grave doubts about the wisdom of settling senior citizens apart in communities of their own. At Sun City, residents must be 50 or older — except that a younger wife will qualify if her husband is over 50. Sun City residents are anxious to put the experts at ease. They are doing fine. Sun City lies on the desert, just out of sight of Phoenix. It is a new town of palm-lined streets, green lawns, air conditioners and — a fact that nags at one's subconscious before he realizes it — no schools.

Instead, there is a golf course, shuffleboard courts, swimming pool, club rooms equipped for ceramics, oil painting, photography, sewing, chess and stone cutting. Hymns are heard from amplified chimes. There is square dancing on Wednesday night, round dancing on Saturday, occasional lectures and book reviews.

"The point is giving senior citizens the environment to live active lives, not creating an old folks' home," said Del Webb, the Sun City builder. "These are the independent older citizens, ones who don't go for 'gimmies'."

Opening day at Sun City was just over two years ago. Now the population is growing close to the 5,000 mark.

Webb insists a monthly income of $400 is adequate to live in Sun City and pay for a home.

The Sun City formula is being expanded now in other retirement communities around the West, not only by Webb but by other developers.

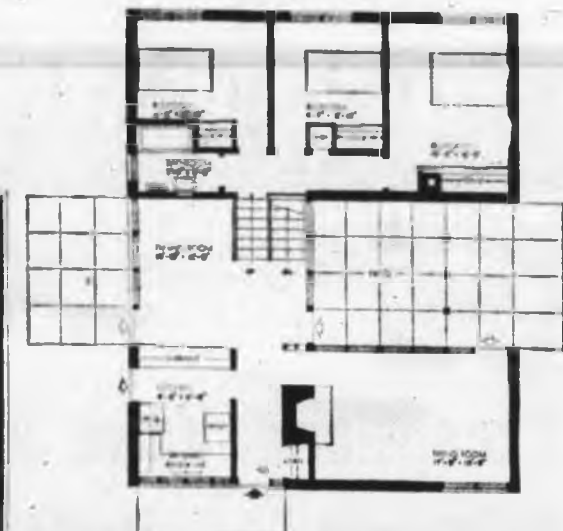

Several lessons have been learned from the Sun City example, among them:

- The minimum age restriction is popular.
- Residents do not want to hear about medical and hospital facilities so much as about recreational and social activities.

Design For Living

NEW HOUSE DESIGN — This U-shaped split-level house by architect Ronald Whiteley, of Don Mills, Ontario, embodies many features, including an enclosed patio offering privacy for outdoor living, dining and entertaining. The house provides three bedrooms, grouped on the upper level and reached by a stairway from the central hall. Only the section under the bedrooms is excavated for a basement and it permits space for heating, recreation and washrooms.

The floor area is 1,143 square feet and the exterior dimensions 34 feet by 40 feet. Working drawings for this house, known as Design 787, are available from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at minimum cost.

Question, Answer

By CHARLES A. TAYLOR
Q. We have a wide expanse of brick veneer trim on our house, which has become sandy with age. What is a good way to clean it?—D. E.

A. Wet the brick with clear water, then scrub with a mechanic's soap and hot water. Rinse well afterwards with clear water to remove all traces of the cleaner. This takes a lot of elbow grease. If you don't want to take the time and effort, the brick can be professionally steam cleaned.

PROMPT SERVICE

Canada Builds High-Rise City At Remote Northern Outpost

OTTAWA (UPI)—It is quite an effort to "spring" a town site in the 1,500,000 square miles that make up Canada's Northwest Territories.

But this summer, 1,500 residents in the Baffin Island settlement of Frobisher Bay will witness the beginning of the first planned townsite in the eastern Arctic.

By 1966, they are expected to have a modern community with all the amenities of "southern" living.

BIG FIRST
In several ways, the Frobisher project represents a big first in northern development. As well as being the first planned townsite in the eastern Arctic, it also will be the first to boast concrete structures.

Because of the unstable soil in other Arctic regions, most construction has involved prefabricated buildings on permanent frost that underlies the tundra. In Frobisher, the town will be set on a natural rock base and feature pre-cast, high-rise concrete buildings.

FIVE-YEAR PROBE
For the past five years the northern affairs department probed means of improving facilities at Frobisher, the most heavily populated post in the eastern Arctic and a growing transpolar air terminal. Now with the help of the works department, the program is under way.

The first construction phase, scheduled for completion by next year, will involve sewage and water systems and a water treatment plant. It also includes a 20-bed hospital with everything from X-ray equipment to isolation wards so that Eskimos requiring medical treatment will receive it on site instead of being flown south.

READY BY 1966
The entire project is to be completed by 1966. By then Frobisher will have a seven-storey apartment building, a student hostel, a 16-room school, and all the "extras" taken for granted in the south — laundries, fire hall, post office and administrative offices.

Frobisher now serves as a refueling base for the United States Strategic Air Command and about 200 of its inhabitants are Americans. One major airline flies there periodically and a regional carrier has three flights per week. But officials are hopeful Frobisher can grow into a major air terminal. With increasing use of transpolar routes on Europe-to-North American flights, they reason that the Arctic townsite is a natural.

Margie Asks Swim Girls To Wear Caps

By MARGIE NAYSMITH

Duncan children really obeyed my request to leave dogs at home.

There wasn't a dog to be seen during our first classes at Queen Margaret's School pool Friday.

I was glad to see this because the animals often romp around the pool and disrupt lessons.

CAPS, PLEASE

I have another request to make. Would the girls please bring bathing caps. They're a must at Duncan because loose hair left in the pool is very hard on the cleaning apparatus. I'd like girls at Elk Lake to wear caps too. They can breathe easier if their hair doesn't get in the way.

We had a wonderful time at Duncan Friday. Everybody jumped right in and showed how well they could kick.

BREATHING HARDER

Breathing in the water hasn't come as easily as kicking, but that's natural. It takes a lot of practice to learn to put your face in the water, close your mouth and breathe out through your nose.

At first the children either close their mouths and forget to breathe out their noses or breathe out their noses but at the same time drink up half the pool.

PRACTICE

I've told the youngsters to practice breathing at home in a bucket of water or in the bath. I can teach the method but only practice makes perfect.

My four assistants at Elk Lake are doing a wonderful job. Three of them are former pupils of mine.

Carol Bishop is 15 and attended the Colonist free swim classes when she was eight. Then she took private lessons from me at the Crystal Garden for two years.

Winston Leckie was a pupil in the free swim classes in 1954 when she was nine years old. That got him interested in swimming and he took further lessons at the YMCA. He's been an instructor at the free swim classes for three years.

INSTRUCTOR AGAIN

I taught 18-year-old Penny Jacobson at the Crystal and she has been a free swim instructor for two years.

Cynthia Bradfield is the only instructor at the lake I haven't taught. At 14 she's a good swimmer and a credit to her mother, who taught her how.

Steering Gear Trouble Knocks Out Chinook

Trouble with her steering gear this weekend knocked Mv Chinook out of service for two runs and pressed emergency repair crews to frantic activity.

The ship encountered similar difficulty on her Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run earlier in the week.

BACK AT WORK

She was back in service yesterday, together with Mv Kahloke, which had reported trouble earlier with one of her four engines.

Both vessels are part of the former Black Ball fleet purchased late last year by the provincial government.

PERMANENT

Ferry service manager Monty Aldous said repairs to Mv Chinook were "of a permanent nature," and a further suspension of service wasn't expected.

Several of the other vessels in the Black Ball fleet are limping along their routes. Mv Smokwa is being pulled around the Horseshoe Bay-Langdale run by a tug while she waits for engine parts to arrive.

Boy Survives Rattler Bite

WEISER, Idaho (AP) — A 13-year-old Portland, Ore., boy was reported in fair condition Friday at a Weiser hospital after being bitten by a rattlesnake near Huntington, Ore.

Steven O'Neil was bitten Thursday as he walked along a path at Farewell Bend park near Huntington. He recalled Boy Scout first aid training to instruct friends in how to administer first aid.

Reunion After 55 Years

Five brothers and sisters who haven't been together for 55 years are enjoying a family reunion here this weekend.

Mrs. Annie Palmer, 3970 Bracfoot Road, is playing host to Ted, Frank, Winne and Mary Hollinghead, their husbands, wives, children and grandchildren—27 in all.

Last get-together was in 1907 at Fernie where they moved as children with their parents from Nottingham, England.

GULL LAKE, Alta. (CP) —

RCMP were looking for a middle-aged man and two youths for questioning yesterday as 150 people and two RCAF aircraft continued an intensive search of the rolling grain fields and woodlands surrounding this central Alberta resort community for missing five-year-old Marilyn Louise Jess of Ponoka.

Rodeo Shattering

He's Ready to Turn In Keys

By DAVID LAUNDY

There's more to safe driving than meets the eye—especially when dozens of policemen and Jaycees carefully observe your every turn and barely conceal their snickers.

I still have sore arm muscles and a stiff neck after a barrel-pumping, horn-honking jog yesterday around the obstacle course laid out at the Esquimalt Sports Centre for the finals of the national teen-age safe driving road-race.

I've always considered myself a good driver. I've never run into a lamp post or knocked over a policeman.

But I failed the test miserably. My score was 296 out of 350.

To add insult to injury, traffic Inspector Brooks Douglass of the city police demanded to see my driver's licence.

I just about told him to keep it. I may turn it in yet.

I was the grand finale at yesterday's skill tests. I followed the 12 finalists in the national contest sponsored by the All-Canada Insurance Federation and conducted by the Canada Junior Chamber of Commerce.

They had already breezed through the course with few mishaps. "They're amazing," observed Inspector Douglass. "Real perfectionists."

"Wait 'til you see me," I thought.

When my turn came I toiled a red and white Ford Fairlane to the first obstacle—five pairs of balls balanced on small pieces of hose with just enough room for a tire to pass between them.

No problem. But then there was the trip in reverse.

"Ridiculous," I muttered

each time a ball bounced away. "If they'd meant a car to do this they'd have put a steering wheel at the back."

Three balls were left standing when I lurched to a stop.

Next came the serpentine, an exercise as ominous as it is difficult. The object was to steer a figure 8 pattern around three barrels placed a close distance apart.

And, of course, you had to come back in reverse.

Again no problems on the forward trip, but slaughter on the way back.

I hoped the judges wouldn't be able to see the shambles from where they had taken cover.

"Only once," frowned a judge.

"Gee," I thought. "I can't even honk the horn right."

During Exercise 3, which involved attaining a speed of 20 miles an hour, shifting to second gear and then stopping over a designated line, I went 22 and screeched to a halt 14 inches short of the mark.

If you think braking is easy you should try Exercise 5 which, according to the rule book, tests "the ability to stop a vehicle."

Short of taking the wheels off the car this is just about impossible.

The judges were pretty happy when I gave their automobile back to them. They kept kind of running their hands over it as you do with an exhausted but dearly loved horse.

Then they told me my score, mopped their brows and dismissed the stretcher crew.

Tonight at a banquet at the Empress Hotel they announce the national safe driving champion. It won't be me. I won't even be there.

Zoning Rule Delayed

Cadboro Bay Ratepayers Association may have gained a stay of execution in its struggle to keep apartments out of the residential area.

The zoning issue is in the hands of the Saanich lands and planning committee for further study.

But no date has been set for the committee's next meeting and Saanich has a policy of keeping meetings to a minimum during summer months.

The ratepayers' group recently notified council it has organized strong opposition to any move leading to apartments.

City Shop To Close?

Eviction of one tenant from View Street property which the city plans to use for a parking garage could put the park of business.

"It cost me about $2,300 to move from View Street," said orthopedic shoemaker Louis Pere. "If the city does not pay this to me then I am sure I will have to quit my shop."

Mr. Pere is one of four tenants evicted by order of city hall when the property including their four stores was expropriated. All plan to seek compensation.

Liquor Prices Win No Drinking Pals

The B.C. booze boost is getting a lot less applause from the men who pay the shot than the man who calls it.

According to a grogshop survey by the Colonist Saturday, Liquor Control Board chairman Col. Donald McGugan at the moment probably heads the list of "people I wish I had never heard of" among those who like to quaff the occasional glass.

To a Vancouver business man, who declined use of his name, the liquor price rise was "monstrous."

He took particular exception to a recent statement by

Col. McGugan that "our prices have been way too low for donkey's years."

"They're putting tax on tax. Simple arithmetic shows liquor taxes were raised more than import duties, giving the government an even higher profit than before," he said.

Jack Tyrrell of 907 Foreshaw Road took it philosophically.

'Almost All Profit'

Mr. Tyrrell, who laid claim to having run off "a bit of the stuff when I was young," said he was at a loss to understand how Col. McGugan could claim liquor prices are too low.

"It cost me next to nothing when I made it myself," he said. "The big outfits make it for a lot less, so it's almost all profit to the government."

The biggest broadside came from William Steiger of 3153 Mars Street.

Mr. Steiger said it is a

"gangster system" that demands such prices, but added, "Liquor prices have been too high as long as I remember."

California visitor John Walker thought the liquor prices a rough way to treat the tourists. At home he pays a third less for his sauce than he does in B.C.

"I imagine the guy who really gets hit is the working fellow who likes to relax with a few beers or a glass of something these summer days," he said sympathetically.

Result of Austerity

The price of imported liquor has been bobbing coyly since the announcement of the federal austerity program.

Two weeks ago the price of the typical bottle of Scotch was $5.15. It then rose to $6.81.

Four days ago it was knocked back to $6.15. This was about 13 per cent more than the original price.

The cutback came as a result of the howls from parched throats that the government had raised the prices on the retail rather than the wholesale price.

Some wines increased by an initial blanket boost of 25 per cent were raised even higher.

Col. McGugan has not said these prices are final.

Navy Sets Show

The navy will give an anti-submarine warfare demonstration south of Beacon Hill Park on the afternoon of Aug. 11 as part of a three-day salute to the city's centennial year.

Taking part will be jet trainers, anti-submarine aircraft, helicopters, destroyers, minesweepers, the submarine HMCS Grise and demolition divers.

Conciliation Report

Food Clerks Vote To Set Contract

Some 250 Greater Victoria retail food clerks will vote Wednesday on a conciliation officer's report aimed at settling a contract dispute spanning six months.

John Nicol, Victoria business agent for the Retail Food Clerks Union, said a province-wide vote would be taken among the union's 4,000 members on the conciliation proposals.

Victoria union members will meet Wednesday at 8 p.m. at the Elks Hall to hear their bargaining committee's recommendation and to vote on the conciliation report.

New Westminster union members will meet Tuesday for their vote and final results will be tabulated Thursday when the Vancouver local holds its meeting.

FIVE STORES

The conciliation officer was appointed six weeks ago in an attempt to bring together the union and a bargaining team representing five major B.C. chain stores.

Negotiations between the union and the five stores—Loblaws, Super Valu, Dominion, Shop Easy and Safeway—started in January, but the union's contract with the companies only expired April 18.

MAIN ISSUE

Main issue at stake is a job security clause sought by the union.

Mr. Nicol said a two-year contract is being sought.

Final settlement will probably set the standards of pay and conditions in other, non-chain store operations throughout B.C.

Tall Talk Rocks Baker

The proprietor of a city bakery got the shock of his life Friday when a big-thinking youth of about 12 years of age walked into his shop and calmly asked for change of a $100 bill.

The astonished baker refused and called police as the youngster mounted his bike and rode away.

Police searched the area around the Dutch Bakery, 1807 Fort Street, but were unable to find the lad.

He was described as being 16 to 12 years old, with light brown hair and wearing a blue sweater.

Hospital Bids Due Soon

Tenders for a $36,000 addition to the municipally-owned Royal Oak private hospital are expected to be called before the end of the month, Saanich welfare officer Frank Heaton has announced.

Mr. Heaton said architects Birley and Wagg had informed him plans would be ready by July 23.

The new wing will add 16 beds to the 38-bed hospital at Grandford and Patricia Bay Highway. It is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

It's a Green Light

Good Citizen Repays Debt

By G. E. MORTIMORE

Looking after other people comes naturally to Mrs. Alice Harper, Victoria's "Good Citizen of 1962."

She began in her teens, when her mother died and she was left in charge of a family of two younger brothers and two sisters, while her father worked as engineer at the Empress Hotel.

Neighbors were so kind to her then—she says—that anything she does for other people is only a small payment on account.

For eight years she has

There were no children from Alice's second marriage to Edward Harper (now a security guard at Victoria Machinery Depot). But Mrs. Harper has spent much of her time being a public mother to people who need someone to lean on.

Giren Medal

This year Mrs. Harper—still trying to pay something on account for the kindness of her neighbors, long ago—was awarded the bronze "Good Citizen" medal given by Victoria Post No. 1, Native Sons of B.C.

She will never know the identity of the committee members who singled her out, or the person who nominated her.

MRS. E. E. HARPER

been manager of Victoria's free food stall, giving away groceries to 1,100 needy people—a job she took over from Mrs. Barbara Green, founder of the stall.

Why does she bother?

"I'm a firm believer in the green light," she says. "I mean, if we've ever had something nice done for us, we can never repay it. We must pass it on."

"When I first came here (1908, aged 17) I couldn't cook very well. I would go along with a piece of fish on a plate, and say 'Mrs. Hammond, do you know how to cook this?'"

Knew Her Way

"She showed me how. She'd help with the children's clothes, too—my brothers and sisters."

By the time Alice Grey (as she was then) got married and had a child of her own, she knew her way around the kitchen and nursery.

Robert, the son of her first marriage to Stuart Gordon, is now living in Long Beach, California. There are two grandsons.

One of 1,100

Possibly, however, the nominator was one of the 1,100 people in 308 families who receive groceries once a month from the free food stall at Victoria Elks' Club.

Provincial, city and Saanich welfare authorities steer the needy families to the stall. Wholesalers, gardeners, hunters and fishermen keep it supplied, and several clubs and groups of volunteers help organize and distribute.

With cash donations, Mrs. Harper buys meat, margarine, porridge, oatmeal and other staples.

"We don't accept anything unless we would eat it ourselves," Mrs. Harper says.

Lesson on Tape

The student can then replay the entire tape to hear the lesson, his answer and the correct answer. "As many times as he feels it is necessary."

The teacher can tune in at will on any or all of the cassettes, to determine how an individual student is doing or hold open forum discussions with the entire class.

This boils down to an extensive application of the Tango system, which is based loosely

Electronic Eavesdropper

'Big Brother' in Classroom

By ED COSGROVE

The Orwellian principle of an electronic "Big Brother" has moved into the school classroom.

But the electronic eavesdropper which will be installed in the language laboratory at "Shawnigan Lake school has none of the sinister significance of author Orwell's world of 1984.

"This is an electronic application of the so-called Tango method of teaching languages," said James Arthur, the school's dean of languages, who will help teach nicians set up the language lab this fall.

He believes Shawnigan Lake is the first school in B.C. at the high school level to have a language laboratory, and may well be the first in Canada to have a language lab in operation.

The Tango method of language instruction is the theory a student must hear a language spoken before he begins to learn it.

One Step Further

The language lab goes one step further in that students are given electronic aids to teaching.

This does not mean teaching machines are used, said Mr. Arthur.

The language lab which will be installed in the school's new science building consists of 15 separate sound-proof cubicles, equipped with tape recorders, microphones and headphones—all connected in a central console operated by the language teacher.

Then, after he is sure he knows the lesson, he records his answer.

Thief Leaves Bloodstains In Break-In

A thief left bloodstains on papers and a doorknob in one of two break-ins reported to police yesterday.

Police believe the culprit cut his hand while breaking a back window at Al and Doug's Shell Service Station, 500 Cook Street. A total of $22 was taken from the till.

Thieves also smashed the lock and handle of a vault at Montague Bridgman, 811 Government Street, and took $250 in bills and silver.

Couple Nears Sea Dream

By JACK FRY

A dream of owning a boat and sailing carefree towards the tropics is nearing reality for one Victoria couple.

For the past seven years, Ronald I. McPhee, now 51, and his wife Mabel have been scouring the beaches and bush for wood—driftwood and old lumber—for the 40-foot gaff-rigged ketch Resolution.

Yesterday, the ocean-going craft was launched, with only one major hitch—a highway bridge was four inches too low for the boat to pass under.

Owner and mover put their heads together and right on the spot took out enough blocking from the cradle to get the boat past the obstacle.

Now all the McPhees have to do is learn how to sail their craft and save up a grubstake before setting sail for the enchanted isles.

The imminent journey to faraway lands will be a new experience to Mrs. McPhee, formerly of Lillooet, whose trips to Victoria by ferry were her only contact with the sea.

Her Manitoba-born husband, has had two samples of seafaring and "has so much salt in his blood" he's going to go back again.

Mr. McPhee worked in the engine room of the CPR coastal steamers from 1927 to the early 30s. He served in the South Pacific and on the Arctic convoy run to Murmansk with the RCN during the Second World War.

Seven years ago, the McPhees acquired plans for their ketch from naval architect Frank Fredette of Victoria.

Mr. McPhee worked as an engine fitter at the dockyard and spent all his spare time on the boat, later worked on it full time. Mr. McPhee helped put on the plank.

Mr. McPhee will work to raise a grubstake. The couple will learn to sail and get to know their boat. And next summer or fall the little ketch will turn to the South Pacific or the Caribbean.

"We'll just start out. We don't know where we're going, but I wouldn't be surprised if we go completely around the world."

Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Collis, Kingsley Street, wish to announce the engagement of their only daughter, Marian Elizabeth, to Mr. George Roderick Leece, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. R.

Leece of Essex, England. The wedding will take place on Saturday, July 28 at 8 p.m. in St. John's Anglican Church, Canon George Biddle will officiate.

Wedding Trip To California

A bouffant floor-length gown of white nylon tulle was chosen by Jocelyn Anne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Whiteley, for her marriage last night to Mr. Gordon Willie Stewart, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd A. Stewart.

The square neckline of the bodice was enhanced with lace flower appliques accented with mother-of-pearl sequins. Sleeves ended in lily points. A coronet of seed pearls and crystal droplets held her chapel length veil.

She carried a bouquet of gardenias and pink princess roses. Rev. C. R. McGillivray officiated in the reception at Holyrood House. Mr. Richard Spooner proposed the toast to the bride. Guests danced to the music of the "Royal Victorians."

Good Grooming

A well-groomed look is largely a matter of attention to little things:

Replacing heel lifts as needed. Checking hemlines to make sure that they're even and the length in keeping with current fashion. Getting rid of hat vells that go limp. Making sure that scarves are absolutely fresh. Wearing gloves that are immaculate. Washing pearls at frequent intervals so that they never have the chance to take on a dingy look. Never letting your hair go a day or two past the regular shampoo time. Not letting your lipstick fade out or become smeary.

Checking on accessories to make sure that they blend well. They need not be the same color but they should be in the same leather and of the same fashion type. That is, a tailored bag with walking shoes and so on.

All of this may sound time consuming. Actually, it does not consume much time. But it does take regular checking and it does pay off in a fresh, attractive look.

Mrs. John S. Harmer of Alberni announces the engagement of her daughter, Kathleen Winona, to Mr. Charles Edward Torheim. The wedding will take place on Saturday, Aug. 25 at 3 p.m. in Metropolitan United Church with the Rev. E. Laura Butler officiating. Miss Harmer graduated from Victoria College this year with her bachelor of arts. (Miss Harmer's photo by Filion Studio and Mr. Torheim's by Ryan Bros.)

DON'T SQUEEZE PIMPLES

Squeezing pimples breaks the skin and leaves dark disfiguring marks. It's easy to combat pimples and blackheads by using the skin with NIKODERM Soap and using anti-septic NIKODERM ointment at night while you sleep. Quickly dries and cleans out pimples and helps heal the skin, softer, smoother, clearer. Ask druggist. Look better fast.

Grease Paint Sticks To Former Reporter

Paris of Toulouse-Lautrec era and we're all working on French accents. After rehearsal we dash off home for a quick dinner, then back to work, this time in Malkin Bowl. Curtain time for "Wonderful Town" is 8:30 p.m.

A well-known musician who has played in Malkin Bowl many times, remarked to me as we walked towards the Bowl the other evening that he was sure that nowhere in the world is there such a wonderful setting for a theatre. I had to admit that there, surrounded by flowers, trees and the lovely park, on a summer evening there's nothing quite like a TATS show. I don't think many years have gone by that I haven't come to see most of the productions. This year I'm seeing the shows from the very best vantage point—the stage itself. So instead of going home with printers' ink all over my hands, for the summer, I'm going home with grease paint all over my face.

That's show business. Love, Terry.

Birthday Celebrated

Miss June Marilyn Marie Harris, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harris of Braefoot Road, was guest of honor when her parents entertained at a party in the Gay Nineties Room of the Colonial Inn to mark their daughter's 21st birthday recently.

Many of her friends attended the evening of dancing. A buffet supper was served. A day at the ballet seminar in Duncan starts with a brisk walk over to the gymnasium of Queen Margaret's School. Guest teacher, prima ballerina Alexandra Danilova, chats with her students, left, Heather McCubbon, a scholarship. Judy King, Jeannie McKay, Terry Lee, also a scholarship winner, Sheila Hazard and Darline Moore, who are already in ballet slippers, leotards and tights. Students came from all over the Island and lower mainland to attend the four-day seminar.

Sheila, Terry, Darline, Heather and Madame Danilova make sure ribbons are secure before beginning an hour-long class in mime. Pupils were extremely fortunate in being able to study with a former member of Serge Diaghileff's company and guest artist of the now Royal Ballet of England.

Rapt attention to their teacher and steady hard work made the mime class pass quickly. This candid photo shows senior students learning an excerpt from the Sleeping Beauty Ballet. Madame Danilova was born in Russia and studied at the Imperial School there. She now teaches and lectures extensively after forming her own company in 1953.

Although classes and lectures fill most of the day, there is time for swimming and fun. The woods around Queen Margaret's School provide ample opportunities for relaxation to the aspiring dancers. Swinging from a lower limb is Lisa Durar, above her is Flora Pigeau and top, Jana Jorgenson. Right, Judy Edwards, and on the school stepladder, Diane Bell.

Dance Seminar At Duncan

The Canadian Dance Teachers' Association is again holding its annual seminar at Queen Margaret's School, Duncan. Students who have been taking classes and lectures in classical ballet, modern, ballroom, national and Scottish country dancing will leave Duncan tomorrow afternoon.

Guest teacher at the seminar is world-famous prima ballerina, Alexandra Danilova. Mara McBirney of Vancouver is also teaching ballet. Teachers, themselves, can take a course in pre-primary dance training given by Anne Gordon of Vancouver.

Classes for both beginners and advanced students are offered. Dancers board in the school dorms and are supervised by "den mothers."

Many juniors attended the classes which end tomorrow. Practising warming-up exercises at the school gym bars are, left, Lisa Durar, Lorna Koch, Margaret Chester, and Coral Ann Perry, all students of the Arts Educational Academy at White Rock, B.C., run by Margaret Perry.

All 'Hunkydory' At New Lodge

By TED SHACKLEFORD

The most outstanding thing about the Salvation Army's Matson-Sunset Lodge in Esquimalt is that residents seem unable to find a single outstanding thing about it—it's all outstanding, they say.

The question: "What do you like most about your new home?" baffled residents yesterday.

'ALL OF IT'

Without exception, they paused, thought hard and then answered: "We like all of it."

One of the residents who entered the home when it was opened a month ago is Sidney Matthews who moved from the city's Mountain View Home.

"My word, there is no fault to find," he said. "We are well looked after and get lots of food."

'JUST WONDERFUL'

"Everything is just wonderful. It is a wonderful building."

Mr. Matthews describes himself as "over 50" but admits to living in Victoria for 70 years. He spends his days reading the Bible, praying, singing hymns with other residents and chatting with friends.

SINGING FRIEND

One of the friends he sings with is 75-year-old Lucas Verkerk, a former draftsman and amateur painter.

Mr. Verkerk has been in the home since it was opened and is equally enthusiastic about it.

Residents Like Everything

"It's splendid—I couldn't wish for better," he said. "I like the whole setup, from beginning to end."

His spare time is spent in working and a little drafting and painting but he finds games like chess too exciting. The only married couple at the home at present are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Houston who have been married for 49 years.

"We couldn't want for anything better," Mr. Houston says, speaking for his wife.

'LIKE IT ALL'

"I don't think there is anything particular about the home we like—we like it all."

Mrs. Houston added: "It is just all good, a comfortable place to live. What more could you want?"

"Everything is hunkydory."

950 Rehearsing

Huge Pageant to Hit Over 1,000 Actors

About 950 persons now are rehearsing parts in Victoria's giant centennial pageant but show producer Dudley Remus says he's aiming well over the 1,000 mark.

He says the show, scheduled for Athletic Park July 28-Aug. 4, is definitely not in trouble but could use actors, especially men, couples and whole families, for crowd scenes.

Also needed is an eighth narrator.

Each of the 16 scenes in the pageant is being rehearsed once weekly, he said last night. The first massed rehearsal of the whole show will be July 24 or 25 in Athletic Park.

The enthusiasm among the cast is "tremendous," he said.

ALL MAY JOIN

Rehearsals are held Monday through Thursday at the Victoria High School auditorium 7 to 10 p.m., and those interested in joining the cast are asked to come then or phone Mr. Remus at centennial headquarters, EV 6-1445.

Czechs Purge Red Officials

VIENNA (AP)—The independent Die Presse reports that dozens of Czechoslovak Communist party police and justice officials have been purged in the last three months. The newspaper said the purges were to root out followers of Rudolf Barak, former deputy premier and interior minister who was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment recently on charge of embezzling government funds.

The Canadian Uranium Research Foundation was formed in 1960 by the six uranium-producing companies in Canada.

'Blind Date' Sells Well CBC-Bound

Brentwood author John Windsor, who lost his sight in a tank battle in Italy during the Second World War, said yesterday sale of his book Blind Date is going "extremely well" in city bookstores.

There were 3,000 copies in the first edition printed at Peninsula Press in Sidney.

Carla Brown, literary agent in London, England, has shown interest in the volume and the CBC in Vancouver has recommended it be serialized for afternoon reading, said Mr. Windsor.

All Frigates To Train This Week

At-sea training of 175 Regular Officer Training Plan cadets will occupy all seven frigates of the Fourth Canadian Escort Squadron this week.

First phase of the training will involve 10 days of pilotage exercises in the Gulf Islands area.

Second phase starts July 22 when the frigates sail for California and Hawaii.

Ships taking part are HMCS Sussexvale, Beacon Hill, St. Therese, Stettler, Jonquiere, New Glasgow and Antigonish. They will return to Esquimalt Aug. 26.

On the July 14-15 weekend they will anchor in Plumper Sound for the annual squadron regatta.

Negro Miners Plan Strike

NDOLA, Northern Rhodesia (AP)—A total of 35,000 Negro miners in Northern Rhodesia's copper belt have been summoned by their leaders to strike Tuesday—the second such walkout in less than three months. The new strike call was issued after the breakdown of lengthy negotiations with mine owners and government officials on the union's demand for higher pay and longer vacations for Negro workers.

Bread Prices Set for Boost

Most of Victoria's small, independent bakers are considering cent-a-loaf price boosts within the next two months.

Predictions were made a month ago that prices would go up July 1 because of higher costs for flour.

The independent bakers expect to incorporate price increases when their present supplies of flour purchased at lower cost run out.

Spokesmen for the two major national chain bakeries operating in Victoria—McGavin Toastmaster Ltd. and Weston Bakeries Ltd.—said yesterday they had had no word on price changes.

Several of the smaller bakeries are still operating with flour ordered and paid for at prices ranging from $3.50 to $3.85 a hundred pounds.

Others, who could not afford large-scale purchases before the price rise, are now paying $6 a hundred. Most bakeries expect to be paying this higher price within the next few weeks.

In most cases the independents will be selling their standard, white, unaltered loaf at 18 cents, up from 17 cents.

However, price of this loaf will range from 17 cents to 19 cents depending on the shop.

Few Girls at Rodeo

Today's junior miss would rather rumple a fender than dent her boy friend's ego.

That was an unofficial opinion gathered from officials and contestants in the national finals of the teenage safe driving rodeo last night.

The opinion was offered to explain the absence of girls among the 12 finalists who are currently contesting the national championship in a series of tests here.

"There are few girls who would want to find themselves in competition with their boy friends," said one youngster, wise beyond his years.

The opinion was offered when contestants in the safe driving competition were asked whether they thought women were the equal of men behind the steering wheel.

The United Nations World Health Organization says investigations have failed to prove women more accident-prone than men.

The organization's report said women tended to have a "happy influence on the traffic accident rate," since married men are less prone to accidents.

And three of Canada's top

attitude toward driving conditions make for a good driver.

Women may be a little more nervous and high strung in traffic, says Doug Gardner of Canora, Sask., but this is probably due to the fact they generally have less driving experience than men.

He said it was unreasonable to say men are good drivers and women are poor drivers. Nick Keeler of Ayerscliffe, Que., had good reason to doubt the old belief that women are poor drivers—his girl finished fourth in a class of 41 boys competing for a chance in the provincial safe-driving finals. Nick won the competition.

Cool Reception

Rodeo officials said few girls turned up for the competition—not because they are bad drivers.

"These young ladies are smart enough to realize that beating their boy friends in driving tests is no way to hold on to a man," said one.

'Y' Ruling Put Off On Money Request

The development committee chairman of the Victoria area YM-YWCA board of directors has expressed a wait-and-see attitude to two municipalities' cool reception to a YM-YWCA money request.

Dr. A. F. McGill said he didn't want to comment extensively while Esquimalt and Oak Bay councils are still pondering the Y's request for a grant towards its proposed new building in the Cathedral Hill civic project.

RECEIVED TABLED Oak Bay tabled the request until it could be discussed by the full council. Esquimalt sent the matter to intermunicipal committee.

Dr. McGill said the project has "gone too far" to be halted by any lack of funds from smaller municipalities. But he felt the Y's more than 100 municipalities might prefer to years of service to the Victoria area entitles the request for funds to serious consideration.

NOT CONSIDERED

Saanich and Victoria councils have also been asked for aid but Dr. McGill did not think they have considered the request.

He suggested the smaller contribute during a five or 10-year period rather than in a large capital sum now.

ARE DUBIOUS

Members of Esquimalt and Oak Bay councils Tuesday said they are dubious about giving municipal grants when the Y is going to raise money for the project by a canvass of houses.

MOSCOW (UPI)—A Russian who stabbed a militiaman but did not kill him has been sentenced to die before a firing squad, according to Moscow Radio.

The radio said Friday the stabbing occurred during a dance in Smolensk, but did not give any further details.

Storage Rules Tightened

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Agriculture Secretary Orville Freeman has overhauled government regulations to prevent shortages of U.S.-owned commodities in commercial warehouses.

A spokesman said Friday as storage stocks decrease in volume and more storage space becomes available, the need for a general tightening of regulations becomes apparent. With more space available, he said, there would be greater chance of wrongdoing.

Lollypop Set Chase Pace

CLINTON, N.J. — Comedian Mike Nichols has been charged with leading state police on a 90-mile-an-hour chase, for an odd reason.

Nichols, 32, denied he was travelling 90 miles an hour, but admitted breaking the speed limit in his hurry to take some lollypops to nearby Hunterdon Hills for use as props in a revue he is producing.

Diefenbaker Breaks Silence

WINNIPEG (CP) — Prime Minister Diefenbaker, in his first major foreign policy speech since the June 18 election, said Saturday night recent weeks have seen fewer Russian provocations and this should prompt the West to reassess its policies and goals.

He restated Canada's support of international negotiations over Berlin and disarmament.

Mr. Diefenbaker, speaking to the Ukrainian-Canada Association's seventh congress, said the Canadian government is firmly behind proposals to bring a halt to any further increase in the nuclear club. He added that the Canadian delegation will make every effort to realize this goal at the Geneva disarmament conference.

Manning Worries

CALGARY (CP) — New Social Credit MPs must not embarrass their party with rash actions and their supporters must not pressure them into irresponsible moves, Premier Manning told the Young Social Credit convention.

"I confess it makes my hair stand on end to hear some of the things these professed Social Crediters have to say," he said.

Socreds Shun Second Fiddle

CALGARY (CP) — National Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson Saturday declared his party will not play second fiddle to any other parliamentary group on questions of monetary reform.

"We stand on this issue. We're going to press it and we're going to apply it," he told the national convention of the Young Social Credit Association. "We will always hammer toward the goal we have been talking about."

The leader of the party which will hold a balance of power in parliament said he will press

No Survivors in Jungle Shepherd Boys Find Wrecked Jetliner

BOMBAY (AP) — Police said early Saturday two shepherd boys found the wreckage of a plane believed to be an Alitalia jetliner that disappeared with 94 persons aboard. They said the wreckage was sighted on a hill in the jungles about 30 miles east of here.

Officers at the town of Junnar reported the body of one man, apparently a European, had been found in the wreckage. They said an Italian lira note was found nearby.

There were no immediate reports of other victims. The police placed the crash site 14 miles west of Junnar.

The announcement came after unconfirmed reports reached the Santa Cruz Airport in Bombay that the wreckage of the Italian DC8 had been sighted by a truck driver near the town of Khed, about 60 miles east of Bombay. Rescue teams were sent to that area.

Earlier police reported investigators had been sent to Murbad, about 50 miles in a more southeasterly direction from Bombay.

The big Italian jet vanished Saturday in a monsoon rainstorm moments before it was due to land at Bombay.

There had been fears the plane was down east of Bombay in mountainous jungles inhabited by snakes, leopards, tigers and the Warli and Katkari tribes, who still use bows and arrows.

JFK, de Gaulle Summit-Bound?

PARIS (UPI) — Renewed speculation of a possible summit meeting between President Kennedy and de Gaulle spread yesterday through France.

French officials like the idea of such talks, but said no firm decision has yet been reached.

Possibility of a summit received new impetus from Kennedy's July 4 call for a "declaration of interdependence" between the U.S. and Europe, and the joint appeal by de Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer the next day for speeded-up European unity efforts.

De Gaulle and Adenauer agreed to a "little summit" meeting of leaders of the six Common Market nations in Rome in the fall.

Peace Congress

Nikita Planning Major Speech

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Premier Khrushchev will make a major speech next week at the Communist-backed "world congress for disarmament and peace," its organizers forecast yesterday.

They said Khrushchev will probably address the congress, which opens Monday in The Kremlin, on Tuesday or Wednesday. About 2,000 delegates from 120 countries including Canada are expected to attend.

The Communist-sponsored World Peace Council is organizing the congress, which will meet under the symbolic "peace dove" designed by Pablo Picasso and nesting on a pile of discarded weapons and flags.

British philosopher Bertrand Russell risked expulsion from the British Labor party to give the congress his support and Canon John Collins of St. Paul's Cathedral, leader of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, is attending.

Police Storm Lunatic Ward

LIMA, Ohio (UPI) — About 100 policemen last night stormed a maximum-security ward at a state hospital for criminally insane and subdued without a fight 60 prisoners who had rioted. The prisoners, described as dangerous, released four hostages unharmed after the police charge.

State of Anarchy Feared by Lloyd

REGINA (CP) — Despite suggestions by Premier Woodrow Lloyd of outside mediation of the fight with doctors over medical care, neither side appeared Saturday to be softening its attitude.

Dr. H. D. Dalgleish of Saskatoon, president of the Saskatchewan College of Physicians and Surgeons, said discussions between doctors and the government can resume only if the controversial Medical Care Act is suspended.

JUST BACK

Premier Lloyd, just back in Regina from a surprise two-day trip to Eastern Canada, said he is concerned with what he termed "the outright challenge to the procedures of constitutional government" by doctors.

"If one can envisage this spreading to other groups we would have a state of anarchy," he said.

Both sides held afternoon press conferences in Regina, the doctors first.

STICKING POINT

Mr. Lloyd said that the "sticking point" between the government and the doctors is the college's refusal to accept a plan that includes all Saskatchewan residents and is under administration of a public body.

Mr. Lloyd said he had seen Prof. Frank Scott, dean of law at McGill University, about legal aspects of the medical care situation. He also said Dean Scott had been in Regina to discuss these aspects.

Asked what the government plans to do, Mr. Lloyd said it would continue attempts to enlist the co-operation of more doctors in the province.

RIGGS APPEAR

Meanwhile signs are appearing that Saskatchewan's striking doctors and the provincial government will resume talks in an attempt to settle the medical care insurance plan dispute.

NOT SACROSANCT

The medical care insurance act setting up the plan "does not appear to be quite so sacrosanct as it used to be," Dr. Kelly said.

He said this is indicated by the government's offer to allow the Swift Current health region to administer its own plan under the act.

'Backbone' Army Moves in Algeria

ALGIERS (AP) — Algeria's national army was moving into the new nation from east and west Saturday as the hard-pressed central government sought a reconciliation with its dissident deputy premiers, Ahmed Ben Bella and Mohammed Khider.

The 45,000-man national army, stationed in neighboring Tunisia and Morocco during the seven-year-old Algerian war, is regarded as the backbone of the Ben Bella faction.

Algeria continued to founder in an almost-total administrative breakdown as the moderate regime of Youssef Ben Khedda tried to stand firm against the revolt of its regular troops and most of the guerrilla army in the interior.

B.C. Doctors Rapped

The B.C. Federation of Labor has asked the provincial government to probe the "far-reaching powers" of the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Key School May Close

SASKATOON (CP) — A Saskatoon doctor yesterday told a Keep-Our Doctors rally here the University of Saskatchewan medical school is in danger of collapse.

Dr. James Forrester said there are "serious signs of erosion in morale" at the medical school because of the medical care dispute.

Students who are here today, he said, may be leaving tomorrow. He did not elaborate.

OUTSIDERS Defended

REGINA (CP) — Government officials last night denied charges made by medical officials outside the province that it is "strike-breaking" in hiring doctors from Britain and other areas for the medicare emergency.

The officials also denied claims the wage-paid doctors were ineligible to practice in Saskatchewan. All short-term help, they said, is fully qualified.

Victoria Man Critically Hurt

HOPE (CP) — A young Victoria man suffered critical injuries early Saturday in a three-car accident on the Trans-Canada Highway. The victim's name was withheld by police.

What To Do?

Seven years of labor ended in crisis yesterday when bond builder Ronald McPhee, in white shirt, found wheel pedal was four inches too high to pass under Trans-Canada Highway bridge at Interurban Road. For answers' solution, see story, Page 11. (Wm. A. Boucher photo)

High Test Monday?

HONOLULU (UPI) — Bad weather today caused the fourth delay in a week of the test of a rocket-borne U.S. nuclear device above the Pacific. Test now is set for early Monday. A secret nuclear device was triggered earlier yesterday a few feet off the desert floor in the first above-ground shot of the long Nevada series.

Street Looters 'Like Leeches'

LONG BRANCH, Ont. (UPI) — Looters fled with the furnishings from a meat market and its owner's apartment Friday after bailiffs dumped the goods on the street.

Owner Bill Haasa had gone away, apparently on holidays, when the sheriff's office struck. Police believe the eviction took place for non-payment of rent.

Among the stolen furnishings were a chesterfield, several chairs, beds and an electronic amplifier.

A police officer thought

creditors formed most of the crowd, but Randall said they were "just anybody and everybody, a bunch of leeches."

Police will have to wait until Haasa returns to identify his belongings before charges can be laid.

Rodeo Shattering

Reporter Shaking

He's Ready to Turn In Keys

By DAVID LAUNDY

There's more to safe driving than meets the eye—especially when dozens of policemen and Jaycees carefully observe your every turn and barely conceal their anxieties.

I still have sore arm muscles and a stiff neck after a barrel-pumping, horn-blowing, jig yesterday around the obstacle course laid out at the Esquimalt Sports Centre for the finals of the national teen-age safe driving road-o.

I've always considered myself a good driver. I've never run into a lamp post or knocked over a policeman. But I failed the test miserably. My score was 296 out of 750. To add insult to injury, traffic Inspector Brooke Douglass of the city police demanded to see my driver's licence.

I just about told him to keep it. I may turn it in yet.

I was the grand finale at yesterday's skill tests. I followed the 12 finalists in the national contest sponsored by the All Canada Insurance Federation and conducted by the Canada Junior Chamber of Commerce.

They had already breezed through the course with few mishaps. "They're amazing," observed Inspector Douglass. "Real perfectionists."

"Wait 'til you see me," I thought.

When my turn came I tooted a red and white Ford Fairlane to the first obstacle—five pairs of balls balanced on small pieces of hose with just enough room for a tire to pass between them.

No problem. But then there was the trip in reverse. "Ridiculous," I muttered each time a ball bounced away. "If they'd meant a car to do this they'd have put a steering wheel at the back."

Three balls were left standing when I lurched to a stop.

Next came the serpentine, an exercise as ominous as it is difficult. The object was to steer a figure 8 pattern around three barrels placed close distance apart.

And, of course, you had to come back in reverse.

Again no problems on the forward trip, but slaughter on the way back.

I hoped the judges wouldn't be able to see the shambles from where they had taken cover.

I honked my horn twice in disgust.

"Only once," frowned a judge.

"Gee," I thought, "I can't even honk the horn right."

During Exercise 3, which involved attaining a speed of 20 miles an hour, shifting to second gear and then stopping over a designated line, I went 22 and screeched to a halt 14 inches short of the mark.

If you think braking is easy you should try Exercise 5 which, according to the rule book, tests "the ability to stop a vehicle."

Short of taking the wheels off the car this is just about impossible.

The judges were pretty happy when I gave their automobile back to them. They kept kind of running their hands over it as you do with an exhausted but dearly loved horse.

Then they told me my score, mopped their brows and dismissed the stretcher crew.

Tonight at a banquet at the Empress Hotel they announce the national safe driving champion. It won't be me. I won't even be there.

Demolition Injures Workman

A young workman suffered severe head and wrist injuries when struck by a section of a building that was being demolished at 118 Menzies yesterday.

Ross Harvey, 18, of 3612 Thorpe Place, was in fair condition at St. Joseph's Hospital last night. He was treated for a fractured skull and wrist and a badly mutilated hand.

Zoning Rule Delayed

Cadboro Bay Ratepayers Association may have gained a stay of execution in its struggle to keep apartments out of the residential area.

The zoning issue is in the hands of the Saanich lands and planning committee for further study.

But no date has been set for the committee's next meeting and Saanich has a policy of keeping meetings to a minimum during summer months.

The ratepayers' group recently notified council it has organized strong opposition to any move leading to apartments.

Navy Sets Show

The navy will give an anti-submarine warfare demonstration south of Beacon Hill Park on the afternoon of Aug. 11 as part of a three-day salute to the city's centennial year.

Taking part will be jet trainers, anti-submarine aircraft, helicopters, destroyers, minesweepers, the submarine HMCS Grise and demolition divers.

Liquor Prices Win No Drinking Pals

The B.C. booze boost is getting a lot less applause from the men who pay the shot than the man who calls it.

According to a grogshop survey by the Colonist Saturday, Liquor Control Board chairman Col. Donald McGugan at the moment probably heads the list of "people I wish I had never heard of" among those who like to quaff the occasional glass.

To a Vancouver business man, who declined use of his name, the liquor price rise was "monstrous."

He took particular exception to a recent statement by

Col. McGugan that "our prices have been way too low for donkey's years."

"They're putting tax on tax. Simple arithmetic shows liquor taxes were raised more than import duties, giving the government an even higher profit than before," he said.

Jack Tyrrell of 907 Forsyth Road took it philosophically. "Whenever they raise the price I just drop to a cheaper brand," he mused.

"I imagine the guy who really gets hit is the working fellow who likes to relax with a few beers or a glass of something these summer days," he said sympathetically.

California visitor John Walker thought the liquor prices a rough way to treat the tourists. At home he pays a third less for his sauce than he does in B.C.

"I imagine the guy who really gets hit is the working fellow who likes to relax with a few beers or a glass of something these summer days," he said sympathetically.

Hospital Bids Due Soon

Tenders for a $30,000 addition to the municipally-owned Royal Oak private hospital are expected to be called before the end of the month, Saanich welfare officer Frank Heaton has announced.

Mr. Heaton said architects Birley and Wagg had informed him plans would be ready by July 23. The new wing will add 16 beds to the 30-bed hospital at Glenford and Patricia Bay Highway. It is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

It's a Green Light

Good Citizen Repays Debt

By G. E. MORTIMORE

Looking after other people comes naturally to Mrs. Alice Harper, Victoria's "Good Citizen of 1962."

She began in her teens, when her mother died and she was left in charge of a family of two younger brothers and two sisters, while her father worked as engineer at the Empress Hotel.

Neighbors were so kind to her then—she says—that anything she does for other people is only a small payment on account.

For eight years she has

There were no children from Alice's second marriage to Edward Harper (now a security guard at Victoria Machinery Depot). But Mrs. Harper has spent much of her time being a public mother to people who need someone to lean on.

This year Mrs. Harper—still trying to pay something on account for the kindness of her neighbors, long ago—was awarded the bronze "Good Citizen" medal given by Victoria Post No. 1, Native Sons of B.C.

She will never know the identity of the committee members who singled her out, or the person who nominated her.

One of 1,100

Possibly, however, the nominator was one of the 1,100 people in 300 families who receive groceries once a month from the free food stall at Victoria Elks' Club.

Provincial city and Saanich welfare authorities steer the needy families to the stall. Wholesalers, gardeners, hunters and fishermen keep it supplied, and several clubs and groups of volunteers help organize and distribute.

With cash donations, Mrs. Harper buys meat, margarine, porridge, oatmeal and other staples.

"We don't accept anything unless we would eat it ourselves," Mrs. Harper says.

A dream of owning a boat and sailing carefree towards the tropics is nearing reality for one Victoria couple.

For the past seven years, Ronald I. McPhee, now 51, and his wife Mabel have been scouring the beaches and bush for wood—driftwood and old lumber—for the 40-foot gaff-rigged ketch Resolution.

Yesterday, the ocean-going craft was launched, with only one major hitch—a highway bridge was four inches too low for the boat to pass under.

Owner and movers put their heads together and right on the spot took out enough blocking from the cradle to get the boat past the obstacle.

Now all the McPhees have to do is learn how to sail their craft and save up a grubstake before setting sail for the enchanted isles.

The imminent journey to faraway lands will be a new experience to Mrs. McPhee, formerly of Lillooet, whose trips to Victoria by ferry were her only contact with the sea.

Her Manitoba-born husband has had two samples of sea-faring and "has so much salt in his blood" he's going to go back again.

Mr. McPhee worked in the engine room of the CPR coastal steamers from 1927 to the early 30s. He served in the South Pacific and on the Arctic convoy run to Murmansk with the RCN during the Second World War.

Seven years ago, the McPhees acquired plans for their ketch from naval architect Frank Fredette of Victoria.

Mr. McPhee will work to raise a grubstake. The couple will learn to sail and get to know their boat. And next summer or fall the little ketch will turn to the South Pacific or the Caribbean.

"We'll just start out. We don't know where we're going, but I wouldn't be surprised if we go completely around the world."

Mr. McPhee worked as an engine fitter at the dockyard and spent all his spare time on the boat, later worked on it full time. Mrs. McPhee helped put on the planing.

Electronic Eavesdropper

'Big Brother' in Classroom

By ED COSGROVE

The Orwellian principle of an electronic "Big Brother" has moved into the school classroom.

But the electronic eavesdropper which will be installed in the language laboratory at Shawnigan Lake school has none of the sinister significance of author Orwell's world of 1984.

"This is an electronic application of the so-called Tango method of teaching languages," said James Arthur, the school's dean of languages, who will help technicians set up the language lab this fall.

He believes Shawnigan Lake is the first school in B.C. at the high school level to have a language laboratory, and may well be the first in Canada to have a language lab in operation.

The Tango method of language instruction is the theory a student must hear a language spoken before he begins to learn it.

He broadcasts programs of instructions to the students, who tape the broadcast on their individual recorders.

"Then they are on their own—each student sets his own pace, with none of the distractions of an open classroom," said Mr. Arthur.

The student replays the recording, either imitating the speech lesson or carrying out the language task set out by the teacher.

Then, after he is sure he knows the lesson, he records his answer.

The teacher can tune in at will on any or all of the cubicles, to determine how an individual student is doing or hold open forum discussions with the entire class.

GALLANT OLD MAQUINNA

★ ★ ★ ★ Her Glorious Memories

All stories have a final chapter, and this belongs to the old Princess Maquinna.

As this is written, the vessel is being broken up for scrap at a Vancouver shipbreaker's yard.

Her bell is now in the perpetual care of the Missions to Seamen in Vancouver, and is used to call to worship in the chapel. There it will remind those within hearing of its rich tone of a stout ship which endeared herself to every man, woman and child who had the privilege of sailing in her.

The Princess Maquinna was, truly a Victoria ship—in fact, the only one of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's large fleet of steamers Victorians could really call their own. Named after a princess, daughter of a famed West Coast Indian chief of the Nootka tribe, the one-funnelled, single-screw steamer was built at Esquimalt and launched at Yarrow in 1913. She was under construction when that firm purchased from the Bullen interests the B.C. Marine Railway Co.'s shipbuilding yards. Victoria was her port of registration and the home of her crew.

An inside berth at the Bellville street dock was her home and the West Coast of Vancouver Island was her working world for 40 years, without interruption.

Designed and built specially for this run, she knew no other. Promptly at 11 p.m. every tenth day, a short blast of her whistle, with perhaps a dozen people on hand to bid goodbye to passengers bound up-coast, "Old Faithful," as she was affectionally known by all West Coasters, slipped her lines and silently backed out to begin the first leg of her run to Port Alice and back.

With anywhere from 50 to 100 passengers, most for way points, but probably 30 booked for the round trip, her holds were loaded with groceries and supplies for canneries, logging camps, mines and small settlements comprising her 26 scheduled northbound stopping places. During the summer months the number of round trippers might reach more than 100.

At noon on the seventh day, she'd be back in Victoria.

But no idle ship was the Maquinna during the next three days. After disembarking passengers, and with a skeleton crew—for half her regulars were given these days off at the end of each trip—she "deadheaded" to Vancouver, or perhaps Seattle, where her cargo of canned salmon, pulp, ore concentrates and other West Coast products was discharged. Then to Union Bay to replenish her bunkers.

Travelling by the Princess Maquinna was an experience difficult to duplicate today. The ship sailed from the dockside proper. The old-fashioned gangplank was used and passengers boarded ship at dock level. Friends were permitted aboard to roam through the ship at will until five minutes prior to sailing time.

Warning whistle at stopping places gave those sight-seeing ashore ample time to return to the ship.

Afternoon tea and midnight supper were served in the saloon for all through passengers. A stewardess took care of the women and children.

Senior officers dined with the passengers, the captain at the head of his table and the first and second officers, chief engineer and purser at the other tables in the saloon. The most friendly relations between passengers and crew were encouraged. Officers promoted deck games and were always on hand pointing out places of interest, landmarks, local characters and the many historical spots along the coast. Bridge, music and dancing were enjoyed in the evenings and often the ship's officers and passengers took in a dance at some remote cannery or logging camp.

THE OLD LADY of the West Coast run.

Her ports of call were diversified. First stop was the logging settlement of Port Renfrew, only five hours out from Victoria. Then Clooose, an Indian village where the natives came out for the mail, supplies and sometimes a passenger, in their big dugout canoes. Bringing these trail craft alongside while riding the long ocean swells as the ship gave them a lee called for expert seamanship.

Bamfield, one of the loveliest spots on the West Coast and the terminus of the marine cable laid on the bed of the Pacific Ocean all the way to Australia, was reached about noon. A visit to the cable station was one of the highlights of the trip for passengers.

Dropping off supplies at logging camps, canneries and fish reduction plants along Barkley Sound, Port Alberni was reached, where passengers had several hours ashore.

Calls were made the next day at Uclulet, Tofino, Clayoquot, Kakawis and Ahousat. Then Hot Springs Cove, where Vancouver Island's only hot sulphur springs bubble. Next, Hesquiat village, in the lee of historic Estevan Point, where again the Indians came out in their canoes to meet the ship.

The Maquinna spent the whole of her third day out on Nootka Sound, calling first at Nootka cannery and famed Friendly Cove, where Captain Cook landed in 1778. More canneries, fish reduction plants and logging camps, the big export lumber mill at Thais, Cepcece, Esperanza and finally fabulous Zeballos, that mining town where not so many years ago (1938-1943) gold bricks to the value of a quarter of a million dollars were packed up every other trip.

Next call was Chambo Bay, a logging camp on floats, where supplies for the fishing village of Kyuquot were landed. The long haul around Cape Cook brought her into scenic Quatsino Sound, and before reaching Port Alice, her destination, she made stops at Winter Harbor, Quatsino village, Holberg and more canneries, mines and logging camps.

A whole day was sometimes spent at Port Alice loading pulp, and the southbound trip back to Victoria, with most of the interesting stops made over again, completed her schedule.

Captain Eric Gillam, the original master who occupied her bridge for 20 years, died at his post on board the Princess Norah, a ship that had just come out from Scotland to relieve the Maquinna.

His acts of kindness will always be remembered on the west Coast. Years ago, the only hospitals of the area were at Port Alberni and Port Alice, 250 miles apart. If by reaching either of these places a few hours ahead of time might save the life of a seriously ill or injured person brought on board at a remote village, or to avoid converting a ship's stateroom into a maternity ward, Captain Gillam thought nothing of passing up several stops. They could be made later.

As a seaman he had few equals.

Succeeding him on the Maquinna's bridge in turn were Captains R. (Red) and W. (Black) Thomson (no relationship) and P. L. Leslie, all gone now; Martin MacKinnon, Leonard McDonald and R. W. Carthew.

The Norah ever did replace the Maquinna. She relieved her during annual overhaul, was used for two summers as an additional ship on the run, then placed in the Alaska trade.

After rounding out 40 years of faithful service through fair weather and foul, her boilers could no longer raise the necessary steam and in consequence her speed had been reduced from 14 knots to a little better than nine.

It happened one night in September, 1952, when she was already loaded, passengers and mail aboard and about ready to sail, 10 minutes before sailing time, Captain Carthew, her last master, assembled his passengers in the saloon and informed them that she had made her last trip and would sail no more. They would be permitted to stay on board—many had already retired for the night—and he provided with breakfast, but must find their own way up-coast as best they could.

Stripped down to the bare hull, converted into an ore carrier and renamed the Taku, for the next eight years, at the end of a towline, she carried concentrates from a mine in Alaska to Tacoma. Now, she's being broken up for scrap at False Creek.

(Preceding the Princess Maquinna in the West Coast trade were the steamers Maude, Willapa, Queen City and Tees. All maintained regular but not as frequent schedules, and before their time intermittent sailings were made by smaller vessels still. The steam schooner Mischief was one of them.)

MILLSTREAM SECRETS

By C. B. FISHER

The Highlands are a range of hills, a twenty thousand acre tract, rising slowly from the outskirts of Victoria and drifting back to Finlayson and Saanich Arms.

Near the heart of the Highlands, about eight miles as the crow flies, lies Matson Lake. A pretty creek called Millstream courses down from the Gowland Hills and enters the jagged little body of water, then leaves over an old dam to tumble down in cascading rapids and quiet pools to the forest below.

It passes mossy banks of ferns and lilies, chuckles along its bed at Millstream Road, slows a bit over the level country towards the Trans-Canada Highway. Then it runs a winding country mile with pools here and riffles there, until it slides under the bridge at Atkins Road. From there to the sea it picks up speed as it drops swiftly downwards in one of its most exciting stretches.

The overall length is about seven miles or so. Throughout its course it's deeply secluded, woody, overcast with giant trees, a bit mysterious, for it is part of the shadowy forest.

It is a refreshing, cascading creek — a magnet for boys, a memory of Arden.

AROUND MATSON LAKE the air is wonderfully fresh. Only water flowing over the edge of the dam breaks the silence, or a bird call.

At the western end of an arm lies the dam, encrusted with moss, buffeted by decades of floods and floating timber.

On top, etched in concrete, are the words "rebuilt in Oct. 1927." It is between 40 and 50 feet long, split by protruding rock.

The largest segment has four or five foot foundation, then a shelf and further four feet of concrete. Water was broken through in places and from the fissures and holes pour small rivulets. Logs have drifted across the lake, and piled up on the dam under the lash of winter gales.

The area is alive with game but it is wary. A small flock of mallards drops in and on a grassy bank a grouse suns himself. There are deer tracks along the water's edge.

The late J. S. H. Matson, who once owned the lake, was a very keen fisherman. He owned about 600 acres in the Highlands, including part of Mount Finlayson, that rises in the northwest. The former owner of The Daily Colonist called the estate Aldermere, after alder in the area. Both he and a previous owner stocked the lake with trout. At one time youngsters from Victoria found Matson Lake and Millstream the answer to a fisherman's prayer. According to a former Oak Bay boy, now an engineer with CPA, it was a paradise.

He writes:

"Every spring between 1927 and 1932, when the trout season opened on March 1, we would bicycle out to Langford Station up the Millstream Road to the fork where Mt. Finlayson Road enters. A Mr. Wolfe had a cabin in there and we fished with his son Pete, who later ran a service station at Mill Bay near the Solarium. We fished downstream to Matson Lake. Pete Wolfe caught most of the big trout, cut-throats up to 17 inches.

. . . Bright as Boyhood

"The largest I believe was over three pounds. Quite a few were from 12 to 14 inches but the average was about ten inches. Fishing was good in March and April. We used worms in the stream and flies on the lake. We fished up past Pete's place into a meadow where the stream widened. There was an ancient broken-down house there. It's a pretty country with wild lilies and ladyslippers."

THE CREEK is a camper's delight, especially for young boys. On weekends you hear shouts and whoops and cries. In the summer packs of Wolf Cubs camp below the bridge at Atkins Road and their voices, according to neighbors, sound like a chorus from some Indian battleground.

Beside the camp is a pool, one of several natural swimming holes in the creek. Below the railway track is another big one with rafts in it. And further downstream is the beautiful Colwood Holiday Ranch with a crystal clear sandy beach pool called a billabong—an Australian word meaning water hole in the wilds.

Along the banks above the billabong is a sporty little pitch-and-putt golf course with terraced holes and miniature fairways. From a teahouse and observation platform on the bank one can look below to a picture of alders, cedars, a winding creek and soft green grass.

FURTHER UP from this little course, unknown to many players at Colwood, the stream runs about 200 yards or so to the east of the seventeenth fairway, in a deep fir-filled ravine. Nearby Mill Hill rises nearly 1,000 feet to

At Shawnigan Lake This Summer

Choir schools, although traditional institutions in England, are seldom found in Canada. One such school exists in Eastern Canada and another came into being at Shawnigan Lake in 1961 in the form of a summer camp operated under the sponsorship of the Shawnigan Lake Boys' School.

This summer, in August, a school for church choristers will again be held at the lake, this time under the direct sponsorship of Christ Church Cathedral. Candidates will be drawn from mixed choirs in the Western Diocese and from the few trained boys' choirs, ranging in size from the Cathedral choir to a small, separately trained group from Holy Trinity Church, North Saanich.

With an enrolment of 30 boys, aged eight to 15, last year's young choristers were able to substitute most creditably for the regular choir of the Cathedral, absent on vacation, and had the privilege of lending the congregation in the musical performance of four services including the exacting Marbeck setting of the Eucharist. This was no small task in such a vast building. Most significant is the fact that many of the boys returned to their smaller parishes as disciples of better church music. That this experiment was successful is seen in the greater enrolment and enthusiasm already apparent this season.

Many a sceptic may wonder what possible appeal the average Canadian lad can find in the necessary discipline and strict attendance required of a choir boy. Certainly some enter under pressure from parents and it occasionally happens that one or two may come "to scoff and remain to pray." Other boys join a choir because active church participation is a part of their environment fabric. A few may be attracted by the vested glory of a choirboy who, at least superficially, is transformed from a grubby urchin to something nearer the angels. Gradually, under guidance they experience the deep satisfaction found in a corporate act of worship with all the true fellowship that this entails. The choristers "glowing out with a glad sound" find themselves to be an important part of the solemn liturgy of the church service whether it be Mattins, Evensong or the richly symbolical Choral Eucharist.

It is common to see in the faces of choir boys a moving blend of spiritual fervor and honest endeavor but meet them in the Vestry and it is evident that only a very firm hand restrains the noisy exuberance natural to their age.

Choir practices are serious and well disciplined sessions designed to train the members to give praise with understanding under the best of musical conditions. Choir outings are tremendous fun so that a director must be a well balanced combination of mentor, adviser and friend using fellowship and shared achievement to best advantage.

Perhaps his greatest reward is the keen choir boy's voracious appetite for new and more challenging vocal expression. No longer is it felt desirable to cast a boy out of the change of voice; rather he is carried through this difficult period in the alto section where his ability to sing music is put to a greater test. From this group come the leaders and leaders of tomorrow and from this level potential evolve many much needed clergy, choirmasters and organists.

The Christ Church Cathedral Choir School will welcome boys from all churches but it is hoped that the majority will have had some previous experience. The Choir School on Page 3

BERT BILLY introducing

Gail Wall

Not so very long ago Dr. Boyd Neel, dean of the faculty of music at the University of Toronto, coined the phrase, "piano mania," and attributed to this peculiar malaise the modern decline in interest in stringed instruments.

To my certain knowledge Dr. Neel has been concerned about piano mania for quite some time. Though at this point he had not as yet coined his phrase—at least, he didn't actually fire it off—he had a considerable amount to say deploring the great influence of the piano two and a half years back.

In January of 1960 it was my particular pleasure to interview him.

He cited the instance of one among many parents of embryo musicians who regarded the piano as quite synonymous with music; presumably just as haps are popularly supposed to be synonymous with music of heaven. When Dr. Neel suggested that, perhaps, the offspring of this particular parent might get on better with, for example, the oboe rather than with the piano, the proposition was received just enthusiastically as if he had recommended a year in jail or contraction of the plague.

BMI figures and Music Festival programs attest loudly to the prevalence of pianists over all other instrumentalists and I myself recently encountered quite a bit of difficulty in finding a "combo" that performed without an 88.

Thus, there can be little doubt but that Dr. Neel is perfectly right in emphasizing the prevailing interest in the piano. But it does seem a pity to conceive of the piano as the ogre of musedom, lying in wait to devour each and every young musical hopeful that comes along, voracious as Sisyphus or seductive as the Lorelei.

A most engaging movie, "The 5,000 Fingers of Dr. T," preached the gospel of piano supremacy but with a strong leavening of satire. Apparently Dr. T's idea of paradise was 500 pianos all being played in unison with the good doctor, of course, on the podium while there were glimpses of all the other instrumentalists, crammed together in an elevator and headed down, down, down into the nether regions.

There seem to be two outstanding causes for piano mania or piano consciousness. One is the extreme usefulness of the piano either as a solo instrument or in accompaniment. Perhaps it is significant that the first known public performance on the piano at Covent Garden in 1767 was "in the accompaniment of a song," the artist being Charles Dibdin.

The other factor much responsible for piano mania is likely "the fact that the instrument gained recognition as a piece of furniture essential to the respectability of the home," which same cannot be said of any other instrument. Social distinction or even social recognition never accompanied possession of a violin, a flute or a horn. These would bring artistic distinction, no doubt; but not social.

IT IS PROBABLY the great mass of social pianists past and present and the great weight of their influence that has generated piano mania and troubled Dr. Neel.

But, for one thing, I am not persuaded that fewer pianists would mean more violinists, cellists, trumpeters, drummers, flautists, tympanists, oboists or anything else. For another, because of its adaptability and popularity, the piano is in great demand and therefore requires a large number of performers.

And there are pianists around who genuinely prefer the piano, who are quite unconcerned about its social status and whose aim it is to contribute all they can to music generally through its medium.

Gail Wall of Victoria is one such.

Miss Wall, who is now 15, started piano when she was eight and has been with the same teacher, Miss Margery Vaughan, throughout. Gail has successfully negotiated Toronto Conservatory piano examinations to Grade 10, counterpoint (Grade 5), history (Grade 3) and Harmony (Grade 4). This record by itself serves to dissociate Gail from the piano dilettantes. Could they be bothered with counterpoint or history?

Gail is much in demand as an accompanist. This she has done and continues to do at the three schools she has attended, George Jay elementary, S. J. Willis Junior High and Victoria High. Outside of her school activities, she often accompanies soloists.

She remembers what may have been her first public performance which took place on CHECK-TV. Scheduled to go on about 10:30 p.m., she ultimately called at around 1:00 a.m. How many tireless and stalwart viewers were still awake at this time history doesn't relate—but Gail secured early experience in the vagaries and unexpected turns of show business.

She has figured in all the Talented Students' Recitals staged by the Victoria Musical Art Society for the past three or four years.

But one recital she did miss: waiting outside to be called while those within weren't even aware that she had arrived.

Miss Wall is also interested in singing. She was a co-founder and, naturally, the accompanist of a students' choir at S. J. Willis school. But this year, under the expert tuition of Roberto Wood, she has started vocal solo training and took second place in her folk song class at the 1962 Music Festival.

And for a time, from Grade 7 to 9, she studied the cello.

Gail has no favorite composers. She hasn't studied them closely enough to decide, she says, which is an excellent defence against answering the question in everything except law.

And she has achieved success outside the field of music. She was a member of the Students' Council at Junior High School and now again at Senior High. At George Jay School she was awarded a handsome trophy for citizenship and, at S. J. Willis, another for "character, scholarship and citizenship."

Miss Wall has her eye on a career in music, teaching the subject in high school.

In view of what has gone before it is notable that she says "music" and not "piano" and doesn't equate the two. She will be a great comfort to the horror-stricken antagonists of "piano mania."

CHOIR SCHOOL

curriculum will include handicrafts, tennis, swimming, boating and campfire outings in a superb country setting. Through the courtesy of Ned Larson, headmaster, all the facilities of the Shawnigan Lake Boys' School will be made available.

The timetable does not seem to indicate a very arduous course of instruction as little more than three hours a day will be spent in practice and service in the chapel with the rest of the day being given over to sports and recreation under the direction of a competent athletic director.

The management of the school is the responsibility of the Rev. Canon R. E. H. Howell; the musical direction will be under Richard Proudman, both members of the staff of Christ Church Cathedral.

What are the aims of such a school? These are to give particular training to those in attendance for their duties as chorists.

Musically this means that they will learn the meaning of in-tune singing, chanting, speech rhythm, pure vowel sounds, clear consonants and all the various intricacies of their art.

Theologically the boys will reach a greater understanding of the liturgy and worship of the church and their sacred duties within its walls. Physically they will enjoy a healthful, well organized 10 days' vacation under ideal conditions at modest cost.

Since the music of the church is undergoing constant revision toward a greater simplicity with emphasis on the underlying verbal meaning of a vocal passage and a less rigid musical form, these boys it is felt, will provide a nucleus of trained choirs ready to lead congregations who, too often, are bewildered and upset by these changes and whose resentment can be traced to a lack of understanding and leadership.

Muriel Wilson's
for FOOD

The lazy droning of bees, white clouds drifting in a turquoise sky, bright fingers of sunlight filtering through green leaves, the feel of sand on bare feet, the sea laminated with gold, meals on the patio and picnics! Just as we change our clothes to suit the weather, so we change our meal patterns. When the thermometer climbs like the mouse running up the clock, we shun the heavy soups and steaks that we love when the north wind blows. Now we look for cool and refreshing food and tall frosty drinks.

That's what we are going to talk about today . . . cool, cool drinks and cool, lazy desserts.

About the simplest dessert I know of is ice cream and I guess it is about the most economical. Once upon a time ice cream was considered a luxury and something of a treat. Now it is everyday fare and considered by nutritionists as a fine food containing the same essentials as the milk from which it is made. One could write a book on all the different ways to serve it. It is a wise housewife who keeps a large carton in the freezing compartment of her refrigerator.

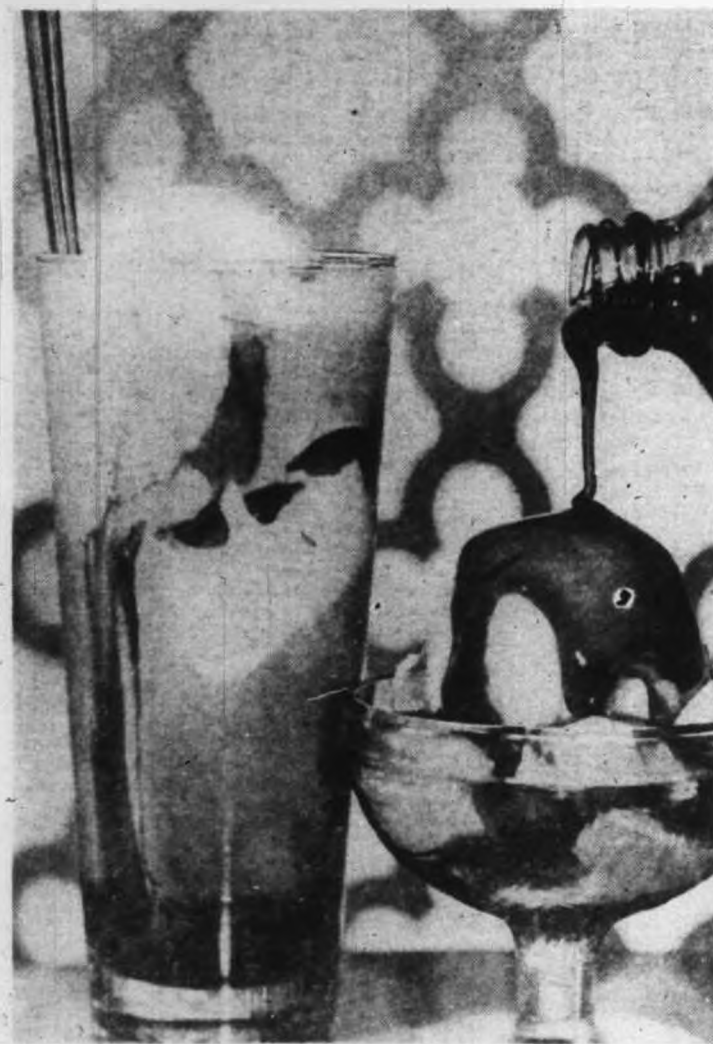

If you are one of those people who care about serving food that looks attractive, you will be more than repaid if you invest (if you don't own any) in a set of tall, dessert glasses. Ice cream plus a few jars of toppings, decorates, chocolate bits, nuts, cherries on the shelf and you are all set to make dozens of elegant but easy to put together desserts.

Vanilla ice cream layered, in tall glasses, with canned fruit cocktail, fresh fruit and especially crushed and sweetened berries, mint flavored whipped cream, tinted green; or try three different flavored ice creams layered alternately with fudge sauce and topped with crushed nuts. All these are easy-as-pie to make and pretty-as-a-picture besides.

For a new taste treat have you tried unsulphured molasses with ice cream? Unsulphured molasses is a high quality syrup that gives a rich golden color accent to ice cream desserts and it supplies taffy-sweetness and flavor into the bargain. Besides color and flavor it is an excellent source of iron.

The Tropical Sundae, in my illustration, is as simple as pouring a tablespoon of unsulphured molasses right from the bottle over a serving of vanilla, chocolate or coffee ice cream. The topping has a flavor akin to caramel or taffy. If you've a mind for butterscotch sauce the molasses can be combined with sugar, butter and evaporated milk.

Molasses Butterscotch Sundae Sauce . . . One-half cup unsulphured molasses, one cup sugar, one-quarter teaspoon salt, one-third cup water, one tablespoon butter or margarine, one-half teaspoon vanilla and one-third cup evaporated milk. Combine molasses, sugar, salt and water in a saucepan. Cook for ten minutes.

TAFFY-TOPPED TREATS

or until a candy thermometer registers 230° or when a small amount dropped in very cold water forms a soft ball. Add butter and vanilla. Cool slightly, stir in evaporated milk. Pour over ice cream. If desired top with chopped nuts and a fluff of whipped cream.

This sauce keeps well in a jar with a lid. If the sauce becomes too thick on storage simply thin with a small amount of evaporated milk.

Another sauce using the unsulphured molasses is called Taffy-Honey Sauce . . . just combine equal parts of molasses and honey. Blend together and spoon over ice cream. For a praline touch top with pecan halves.

Do your children like floats? Try this . . .

Taffy Float . . . One tablespoon unsulphured molasses, milk and one scoop of vanilla, chocolate or coffee ice cream. Yield . . . one serving.

Put the molasses in a twelve ounce glass, fill two-thirds full with milk, stir to blend. Add ice cream and stir vigorously. Make a Taffy-Banana Milk Shake by substituting one fully ripe mashed banana in place of the ice cream in the above recipe.

Iced tea is a perfect thirst quencher . . . you can use regular or instant tea and of course there are a lot of little fancy touches which will make that glass of frosty tea special. Instant tea makes excellent iced tea . . .

Put two level tablespoons of instant tea into a large pitcher and stir in one quart of cold tap water. Add ice and serve.

For that special touch here are a few ideas . . .

Serve with lemon, lime or orange wedges.

Use tinted ice cubes . . . use fruit juice and food coloring.

Freeze sweet cherries, maraschino cherries or mint leaves in ice cubes.

Frost rims of glasses by dipping first in fruit juice and then in sugar.

Chill glasses before using.

Place a fresh pineapple spear in each glass of iced tea.

Spoon in one tablespoon frozen lemonade.

Place a thin wedge of cantaloupe or honeydew melon in each glass.

Skewer pineapple chunks, maraschino cherries and melon balls on bamboo skewers and use as stirrer.

For the tricycle set or for adults watching their weight, Fruit Juice Snow makes a lovely light chiffon textured dessert . . . Simply mix one envelope unflavored gelatine, half a cup of sugar and a pinch of salt. Add one and a half cups boiling water and stir until dissolved. Now add one can (6 oz.) frozen concentrated fruit juice of your choice. Chill until it becomes syrupy. Add two unbeaten egg whites.

Bowmen on the March

The bowmen are coming to town!

I guess they must have been nervous in Nottingham in the time of Robin Hood when they heard this same news 600 or so years ago.

But things have changed much since. Even though the longbow survived the introduction of gunpowder for a surprisingly long time, it has now inevitably arrived at the position where its use is essentially recreational.

As archery became less than a matter of governmental concern, so it was enthusiastically taken up as a recreation because a shining heritage is not lightly forgotten. And archery fills all the requirements of a recreation in that it provides opportunity for friendly competition—as this week in Victoria—for healthy exercise, for good companionship and for something which, by the very demands it makes upon its protagonists, maintains an unending interest.

So when the bowmen, 150 or more of them, from Seattle, Portland, Libby, Vancouver, Regina, Winnipeg, Hamilton, Toronto and other centres converge on Victoria next Friday we shall not have to duck behind the breastworks. No, not even though Marcie Bengert of Salem—who is champion shot among the girls—and Hal Sherlock of Seattle—who is grand champion among the men—are coming along. Everything is peaceful-like. Marcie and Hal are here to defend their championships against all comers—not to invest or beleague the fort of Victoria.

Competition starts on Friday afternoon and continues all through Saturday and Sunday. In charge of all this are "Field Captain" Bob Copeman of Victoria and "Lady Paramount" Doris Usher, also of Victoria. They see to it that rules are observed, safety regulations kept, and, where issues are in doubt, they are the supreme court whose decisions are final and binding.

These PNW Archery Championships have been in existence since 1927 but this is the first time they have been decided in Victoria. The association president, elected at the championship meet at Libby, Montana last year, is Fred Usher of 2677 Dunlavy Street. The host clubs of Vancouver Island are Victoria, Ladysmith, Nanaimo, Port Alberni and Campbell River.

A rare cloud of arrows will have flown around in MacDonald Park between Friday and Sunday before aggregate scores are totted up and the prizes awarded. This latter event takes place at 4 p.m. on July 22 with association President Usher making the presentations.

But first there are "York" and "American" rounds for the men, "National" and "Columbia" rounds for the girls and "Flight Shoots" and "Clout Shoots" for both.

Then there are separate rounds—or "ends"—if you prefer to be frightfully technical—for "juniors" who range in age from 12 to 18 and "cadets" who are under 12.

And, finally, the entire concourse of archers is divided into a section for those who use sights and similar devices and those who shoot "instinctively."

reports

FRED and DORIS USHER of 2677 Dunlavy Street, in Victoria, are important figures in the Pacific Northwest Archery Championships at MacDonald Park on July 20, 21 and 22. Fred is president of the Pacific Northwest Association and Doris acts as "Lady Paramount" at the championships with the responsibilities of enforcing regulations and making decisions in half-brotherly contests among the lady archers.

Nowadays, bows and arrows seem to be pretty complicated. I imagine they would just about floor Robin Hood or William Tell or Doyle's Samkin Aylward were those worthies around today.

But the spirit of friendly competition is still very much present. No doubt there will be some impressive scores tallied even among the cadets. There will be spectacular "clout" shoots where the target, at 180 yards for men and 140 yards for the girls, is concentric rings on the ground. Together the archers tilt their bows to the sky, draw together and shoot together. A great shower of feathered arrow rises in the air as they did with historic results at Hastings. But they will fall, not on a body of Saxon huscarles, but harmlessly within the painted rings on the turf of the park.

Then there will be the "flight" shoots to determine who can send an arrow the greatest distance. Last year, Art Williams bowman and bowyer supreme of Ladysmith, fired over 650 yards.

This 18th exceeds the records established when the bow was of yew, ash or elm. Nowadays they are of laminated fibreglass and wood with sights, indicators, custom grips and goodness knows what all. And arrows are now mostly fibreglass of aluminum and strings of dacron rather than cord.

Of course, there is on record that Sultan Selim of Turkey fired an arrow 972 yards in the year 1795 but the toxophilites regard this feat as "improbably at least."

But even though no records be set or sensations occasioned and even though the goddess Diana, William Tell, Robert Fitzooth of Huntingdon and little Cupid—all very expert and famous archers—are present in spirit only, the gathering of the archers of the Pacific northwest will be an event of stature and an occasion of much enjoyment.

Everybody is welcome to come down to the park and see the fun. To some it may prove to be the renewal and to others the beginning of a pleasant acquaintance. Either way, it's going to be a great time.

Millstream Secrets

reward the climber with a wonderful panorama of mountain, city and sea.

In the early days steelhead used to come up from Esquimalt harbor as far as the tumbling falls. Occasionally the odd one is found there now. In the early days bluejackets from Queen Victoria's warships stationed in the harbor used to follow the creek up hunting for game. The creek took its name from an old mill on its banks.

Up from the sandy, winding arm of the harbor the creek is exchanting. Above the first series of falls in a clear 40 foot pool. Over its calm buttefalls swim. The take flight at the sound of danger, mounting as they near the sea.

In the distance can be heard the roar of water breaking through a narrow cleft in the rocks and tumbling into a wide, deep pool.

The scent of cedar hangs over a gulch, as the stream runs below. Ivy climbs upwards on a tilting giant whose thirsty roots absorb the mountain water.

Smoke arises and the air is touched with the flavor of burning twigs and leaves. Beside a tiny fire a small red-headed boy lies, half curled, a hatchet in his hand. He is at home here.

The first needs to baking, they are called Cocoa Krispies.

To prepare... melt one-quarter cup margarine or butter in a large saucepan. Add one-half pound marshmallows and cook over low heat stirring constantly until marsh-

THE 'TWO-GUN TERROR'

It's now sixty years ago since our coast papers front paged the exploits of one, Johnnie Tackum, an Euclataw brave who apparently set himself up as the "Two-Gun Terror" of Toba Inlet. In due course, thanks to the Provincial Police from his fiord-like fastness at the north end of the Gulf of Georgia, Johnny was brought to the bar of justice in Vancouver's old wooden courthouse; a site on Hastings Street now known as Victory Square.

Shackled not only with conventional irons, Johnny found himself also linked with charges that he "did murder one Frank Hussey," shoot with intent to murder one George Card, the same with Francis Gallagher and Ellis Johnston, too.

As his bullets went wide of the latter two, contended the Crown, it was prepared to settle for the lesser charge of shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm. However, anyway you phrased it, it was enough trouble for one man at one time.

To the surprise of those who watched him committed for trial (by my old friend Hy Alexander) the northern murderer turned out to be a nondescript, slightly undersized Siwash, far removed in manner from the upcoast desperado the papers described.

With quiet interest in the scene around him, perhaps his slightly hesitant bearing made spectators think they'd been hoaxed.

A couple of months later at the May Assize, the eccentric Mr. Justice Archer Martin presided (in ermine trimmed robes and wig) and although W. J. "Bill" Bowser was slated to act as Crown Counsel came a last-minute departmental edict and F. A. Cane took the prosecutor's role.

Bowser, without a change of pace, crossed the legal arena and undertook the defence of the penniless Johnny Tackum. It was a small thing, but somehow serves to bolster one's faith in humanity.

QUEER PEOPLE INVOLVED

This case of Johnny Tackum's was a queer one, involving some queer people and it all started one day in early March, 1902, when Johnny and his klootchman, (his woman) got an assignment from the Toba Inlet handlogging partners, George Card and Frank Hussey, to go down to Reid Island and get a load of boom chains from storekeeper Wylie.

I don't know if you ever heard of Edgar Wilmot Wylie, who was a character, as most of our pioneers were. Back in the early 80's he'd been a sheriff in Ballard City, North Dakota, a wide-open dump rather like Deadwood, a town of false fronts and morals to match. A man called Smith was mayor at the time Wylie got caught with his hands in the civic till. Smith was caught off base in some equally immoral gambit. The pair fled to Canada, Wilmot Wylie calling himself Wilmot until he got as far west as Reid Island, B.C., where he found Smith already settled.

The rest of the story is old hat to up-coast dwellers. Smith one day caught a man called Benson in a compromising situation with his wife and killed him with a blow on the head with the proverbial blunt instrument. That evening Smith and his wife packed Benson's body down to the beach and launched it to the tides in an open boat.

Later Mrs. Wylie, the storekeeper's wife, another one-time recipient of the favors of the late Mr. Benson, came up to the Smith's cabin and helped Mrs. Smith mop the blood from the bedroom floor. The whole thing was aired in court in 1895, seven years before Johnnie Tackum called at Wylie's for the boom chains. But it gives an idea of the interesting lives these people led.

Page 8—The Daily Colonist, Sunday, July 8, 1962

The boom chains were heavy, so Johnny left his canoe at Wylie's and returned up channel with the load in Wylie's big, white-painted "sealing" boat. These sealers were carvel-built "double-enders, beautifully proportioned, with almost canoe-like lines."

Passenger on the return trip with the Indian couple was landlogger Frank Gallagher, who got to tipping on the trip—Wylie sold booze to anyone white or Indian—and finally toward evening Frank decided to stop off and see another logging pal, Ellis Johnston, halfway up Toba Inlet.

That night the pair, drunk, were stumbling around the beach, lantern in hand, when a sudden rifle shot from an offshore boat sent them lurching in haste back to the safety of their cabin. Both swore the shot was fired by Johnny Tackum.

This was the two-handed indictment a jury had to mull over, and they also, being old timers, some with a knowledge of coastal ways, said "Not Guilty."

Came next the question of the shooting of George Card. But George it seems was in hospital having a bullet extracted from his leg and wasn't fit to appear. At least that was the story, though I happen to know that George was around the courthouse until the case was about to be called then ducked off to a hospital bed. Just for safety's sake the bed was in Victoria, in the Royal Jubilee Hospital!

This delay necessarily held over the Hussey murder hearing, for somehow the bullet in Card's leg was an elusive clue to the mystery of the whereabouts of Card's logging partner, Frank Hussey. Mr. Hussey, it seems, had vanished completely.

The postponement, thought the Crown, would give time to produce his body, in which event the equally interested Mr. Bowser would get knowledge of how he died.

The story of Hussey's disappearance was sequel to the midnight shot that wafted past the drinking friends, Gallagher and Johnston, the shot alleged to have come from Johnny Tackum's offshore craft.

The next day, Johnny and his woman had arrived further up the inlet to deliver the boom chains at Card's cabin.

Johnny, said Card, arrived truculently drunk and after dumping the boom chains on the beach, as he went down the shoreline, was seen to thump his female companion on the head with the butt end of an oar. The wretched klootchman subsided in the bottom of the boat and the logging partners, watching from their veranda, both considered the woman had been given a mortal blow.

"I'll catch him up in a canoe and see if she's alright," said the chivalrous Hussey but his partner, Card, grabbed him by the arm, remarking, "Don't do it, Frank. He's full of liquor and he's a madman when he's drunk. You'll get shot."

However, nothing daunted, Hussey set off, and an hour or so later, around dusk, as Card was setting out a batch of bread, there floated over the stillness of the sound a single rifle shot.

Intuition told Card what had happened; Hussey had been shooting until it was inshore, set off along the beach in the gloom and paddle quietly.

The answer to the report of a side of Card's canoe didn't wait for paddle after he where Gallagher on his leg, and Andra on Texad table Lucas he on the southbou A day later couver.

STAMP PACKET

A remarkable collection of pictorial stamps illustrating the theme, "The Human Consequence of Industrialization," of HRH the Duke of Edinburgh's Second Commonwealth Study Conference, assembled by a Toronto philatelist, Edgar Davies of Cottonwood Drive, Don Mills, was displayed at McGill University and later at Toronto and on the special trains which carried members across Canada to Vancouver during the 25-day conference which began in Montreal on May 13.

The 300 delegates from 35 countries and territories, found stamps of their respective countries put together in "stories in stamps" of industry, agriculture and transportation. Two large exhibits were given over to Commonwealth issues, and a third to Canadian stamps. There were 164 stamps in all, each depicting a scene associated with the conference theme. All were mint stamps, some issued as far back as 1927.

Mr. Davies who has collected stamps all his life and has one of the most extensive collections in Canada, deserves the congratulations and highest praise his original display received from the visiting delegates and all fellow philatelists who realize the infinite patience and labor such a collection involves.

IN CONNECTION with the find of 41 B.C. covers which were left in my care for almost seven years and of which an account was printed recently in this column, an amusing incident comes to mind. One of the most exclusive dealers in the U.S. who dealt only in rarities and did not need to advertise, was the late Warren Colson. One of his chief claims to fame was due to the many trips he took to the Hawaiian Island where he systematically covered all the outer islands and discovered more of the famous "missionary stamps" than any other philatelist. These stamps were worth from $5,000 to $20,000 each.

Into my office in the old Arcade Building breezed Mr. Colson one day.

"I have a proposition to make," he announced. "I know there are a number of B.C. covers in the possession of a pioneer family but the only thing I do not know is their name and address. If you will give me this information I feel, that coming from Boston with unlimited funds, I can purchase those covers, where you local people have not a chance. Boston money usually talks. I will give you 10 per cent of what I pay for them, or if the deal does not go through, will stand you lunch at the Empress Hotel."

happened; Hus-

ing until it was quite dark, Card paddling close inshore, set off in another canoe. As he slipped along the beach close to Johnny's shack, he saw in the gloom the white sealer and resting his paddle quietly called out: "Is that you Frank?"

The answer was a stab of yellow flame and the report of a gun, the bullet going through the side of Card's canoe and tearing into his leg. Card didn't wait for another shot, but digging in his paddle after half an hour reached Higgins' camp where Gallagher and Johnston put a tourniquet on his leg, and took him down-channel to Van Anda on Texada Island. There Provincial Constable Lucas heard his story, before putting him on the southbound coastal steamer Cassiar.

A day later he was in a hospital bed in Vancouver.

NEW INVESTIGATOR

From then on it was Provincial Constable
Henry F. M. Jones of Shoal Harbor who took up the investigation. In the usual lug-sailed sloop he went up Toba Inlet and searched in and around the Hussey-Card cabin. He found no firearms in the shack, which was unusual, but did find evidence that a lot of whiskey had been drunk (or sold) judging by the two-gallon containers.

He had with him four willing helpers, loggers he'd picked up on the way, and with their assistance he thoroughly searched the bush, then dragged the foreshore where Card said he'd been shot.

They found no trace of Hussey.

Across the inlet was another of Johnny Tackum's cabins, and when they crossed over, there awaiting them on the beach, was the Toba Inlet terror. He was unarmed but in the cabin behind him was a 38.55 rifle.

Seems he was just about to return the white sealer to Wylie at Reid Island when the police arrived. With him at the time was his brother, Jullus, who, Indian fashion, quietly paddled off to some other part of the inlet as soon as the police appeared.

It was Johnny's woman that Jones badly wanted to talk with, but she wasn't around.

Johnny was taken down to Vancouver and after turning him over to district headquarters
Jones returned up-coast to continue his search for Annie Tackum.

Finally one day he got word that she was 60 miles away, at the head of Bute Inlet. There he went, only to find she'd gone to Lund. Coming south down the channel he got fresh word that she might have broken her journey at Cortez Island.

Chasing an Indian in those days was rather like chasing a seagull. However the policeman landed at Cortez and walked across the island, and at a small Indian encampment got word that Annie was elsewhere on the island. The indefatigable Jones finally managed to catch up with her at another island camp. After some questions he examined her head. Annie, to his surprise, bore no wounds, no bumps or marks of any kind.
Furthermore she said her husband had never hit her in his life.

This was all pretty queer, and an abrupt departure from standard procedure. Indians always beat up their wives when in liquor.

Annie seemed a sensible sort of creature and volunteered the information that Hussey and Card were a drunken pair, who sold liquor to Indians and frequently got drunk themselves. When they did they got quarrelsome, and it was during one of these drunken orgies that Card killed Hussey with his rifle, just as he got a retaliatory bullet in the leg.

MORE CONFUSION

Back up the inlet went the constable, and checking this story out found that Hussey and Card were undoubtedly a hard drinking pair, and frequently quarrelled.

Summer waned, and came the fall assizes with Judge Irving on the bench. Although Card was still a hospital patient, Bowser strenuously objected to a postponement until the spring.

"Let's have his evidence by deposition," was his suggestion. But Judge Irving overruled him and the case went over to the next assize.

Came the spring of 1903, and now it was the turn of Judge Drake to view Johnny Tackum who, if he seemed content to trust his dilemma to the white man's curious code, his counsel Bill Bowser seemed to place greater assurance in the formula signed by King John at Runnymede.
Thus, finally, within the terms of the Habeas Corpus Act, Bowser brought to an end the protracted accusations that no one seemed able to prove.

In the back of his rather astute mind of course was the knowledge that the slug dug out of Card's leg came from a smooth bore weapon, whereas Johnny Tackum's gun was rifled. I say astute, for in his career Bill Bowser became B.C.'s attorney general.

STILL A MYSTERY

The Crown withdrew the murder charge, and the death of Frank Hussey remained a mystery.

While occasionally in the months that followed clues were run down, to this day not a trace has been found of his remains.

With the Hussey murder charge withdrawn, it was late in the evening of May 21, 1903, that the jury filed back to their courtroom seats with a verdict that Johnny Tackum wasn't guilty of shooting George Card in the leg.

If he didn't quite understand how it all came about, at least Johnny, as he returned up coast to the haunts of the eagle, the raven and the blackfish, must have been sure of one thing - the white man certainly made life increasingly complicated for himself.

Big Joe McCarthy Was a Dambuster

COMOX SKIPPER OFF TO CONGO

When Big Joe McCarthy raises his glass, May 16, he'll probably be drinking a toast to a Lancaster that didn't get off the ground.

If it had, he might be dead, instead of being Wing Commander J. C. McCarthy, DSO, DFC and Bar, commanding officer of the Demon 407 Maritime Patrol Squadron at Comox, and ex-dambuster.

By TED GASKELL

May 16, 1943, he was one of the 19 skippers who were scheduled for the bombing raids on the Mohne, Eder and Sorpe dams in Germany's industrially powerful Ruhr Valley. He was one of five pilots who took off heading for the Zuider Zee, intended to divert fighters from the main force headed by Guy Gibson. But an unserviceable aircraft meant a delay of 15 minutes for him until another could be readied. In this 15 minutes his four companions took off. Two were shot down and lost, the others so badly damaged that they had to return to base.

Joe McCarthy might never have been a dambuster if it hadn't been for a friend who had never flown in his life.

Joe, a native of Long Island, New York, was in the big city one fine day and decided he'd take a flight. He had his pilot's licence which he won after taking lessons paid for out of his earnings as a summer lifeguard.

In New York he met a friend, who was so impressed with the flight that he decided to join the RCAF. "Why don't you come?" he asked Joe.

"Why not?"

That was in February, 1941.

The year 1942 saw him having his first taste of operational flying in England.

After a number of trips on Hampdens and Manchesters he was posted to a Lancaster squadron where he took part on the first daylight raid on Berlin and met Guy Gibson.

Flying bombers in 1942 was no piece of cake.

A small force had to do a lot of work and when Joe was detailed as flight commander he was told that his main job would be detail other crews for operations and make perhaps one trip a week. In one two-week period he made 12 night flights.

His tour over, a DFC on his tunic, the American was "at rest."

But not for long.

Gibson, who he had met earlier, was forming 617 Squadron "for one trip only."

It wasn't easy to find the right men. First they had to be good pilots. Second they had to be between operations so that squadrons were not broken up or left short of men. It wasn't worth it, not for one trip.

That was the start of a career which brought a bar to the DFC, a DSO and fame in film and print for big Joe McCarthy.

The nine-week training period started with no one having any idea where they were going or what they were going to do.

All they knew was that they had to drop bombs with great accuracy from 350 feet. They bombed moving targets in the water; they bombed cliffs; they bombed ground targets; they once even bombed a specially built dam.

Then came the order to improve accuracy. The 250 feet level was too high. The bomb casing was breaking on impact. Height was gradually reduced until the bomber could hit a target with accuracy from 60 feet.

And the crews still didn't know where they were going.

All they knew was that they had to drop 9,000 lb. spherical bombs from 60 feet up.

Then the day before the trip, they knew. The Mohne, Eder and Sorpe dams. Great concrete dams with towers at each end.

Now they knew why the two lights were mounted below the Lancs' wings, set at such an angle that when the beams met on the water they indicated a height of 60 feet. Now they knew the reason for the bits of wood, nails and strings which were used as a sighting device. When the nails and towers were lined up, that's where the bomb release would be pressed.

And they knew why it was to be a "one trip only" affair.

If the first attempt failed. There could be no second try. The enemy would have the whole of the valley so thick with fighters not even a sparrow could get through.

WING COMMANDER MCCARTHY has now been posted to the Congo as air transport officer for the United Nations. He will do the six-month tour then return to Canada. His wife and family, Joseph, 11, and Karen, 6, will remain in Canada.

Joe's five took off. The first four ran into fighters north in the Zuider Zee area and gave Gibson's nine the chance to get through with little interference. Meanwhile another five had taken off and were to join with Gibson's nine and McCarthy's five, or such as were left.

Two more were shot down en route; two were lost over the dams. Gibson lost four of his nine. Only eight of the 19 got back.

There were five bombers that attacked the Mohne.

One of Barnes Wallis' bombs would be enough to crack the 65 foot-thick concrete dams, exploding at a depth of 40 feet and the 300,000,000 tons of water behind would do the rest.

But allowing for human error, three bombs were planned for. One hit the water and bounced over, another hit the wall and did little damage. The others struck home.

This was no mean feat, this dam raid.

Enemy fire power was all around. And once one bomb was dropped, there was no question of nipping in and dropping the other two. Each successive aircraft had to wait until the 1,000 feet of spray caused by the previous explosion subsided before he could go in.

Two other aircraft made successful hits on the Eder.

Joe's bomb hit the Sorpe, an earth dam with a concrete core. But it wasn't the bomb that did the damage. It was the Germans. Realizing that breaks in the dam would flood the valley, rather than see acres laid waste, they deliberately let the water out, under control, and did deliberately and methodically what the Lancaster set out to do with violence.

The mission was a success.

The dams lost their water. There was no water for electric power to run industry. The canals which brought ore to the mills and steel to the factories hadn't sufficient water to allow passage of the barges.

This wasn't the last trip for 617.

Morale was so high and the efficiency was so great that the squadron was kept together and was used for special work. In practice they learned to drop bombs within 50 feet of a target from 20,000 feet. This was an average which had to be maintained before they were allowed to carry the new 12,000 pounders and later the 22,000 pounders.

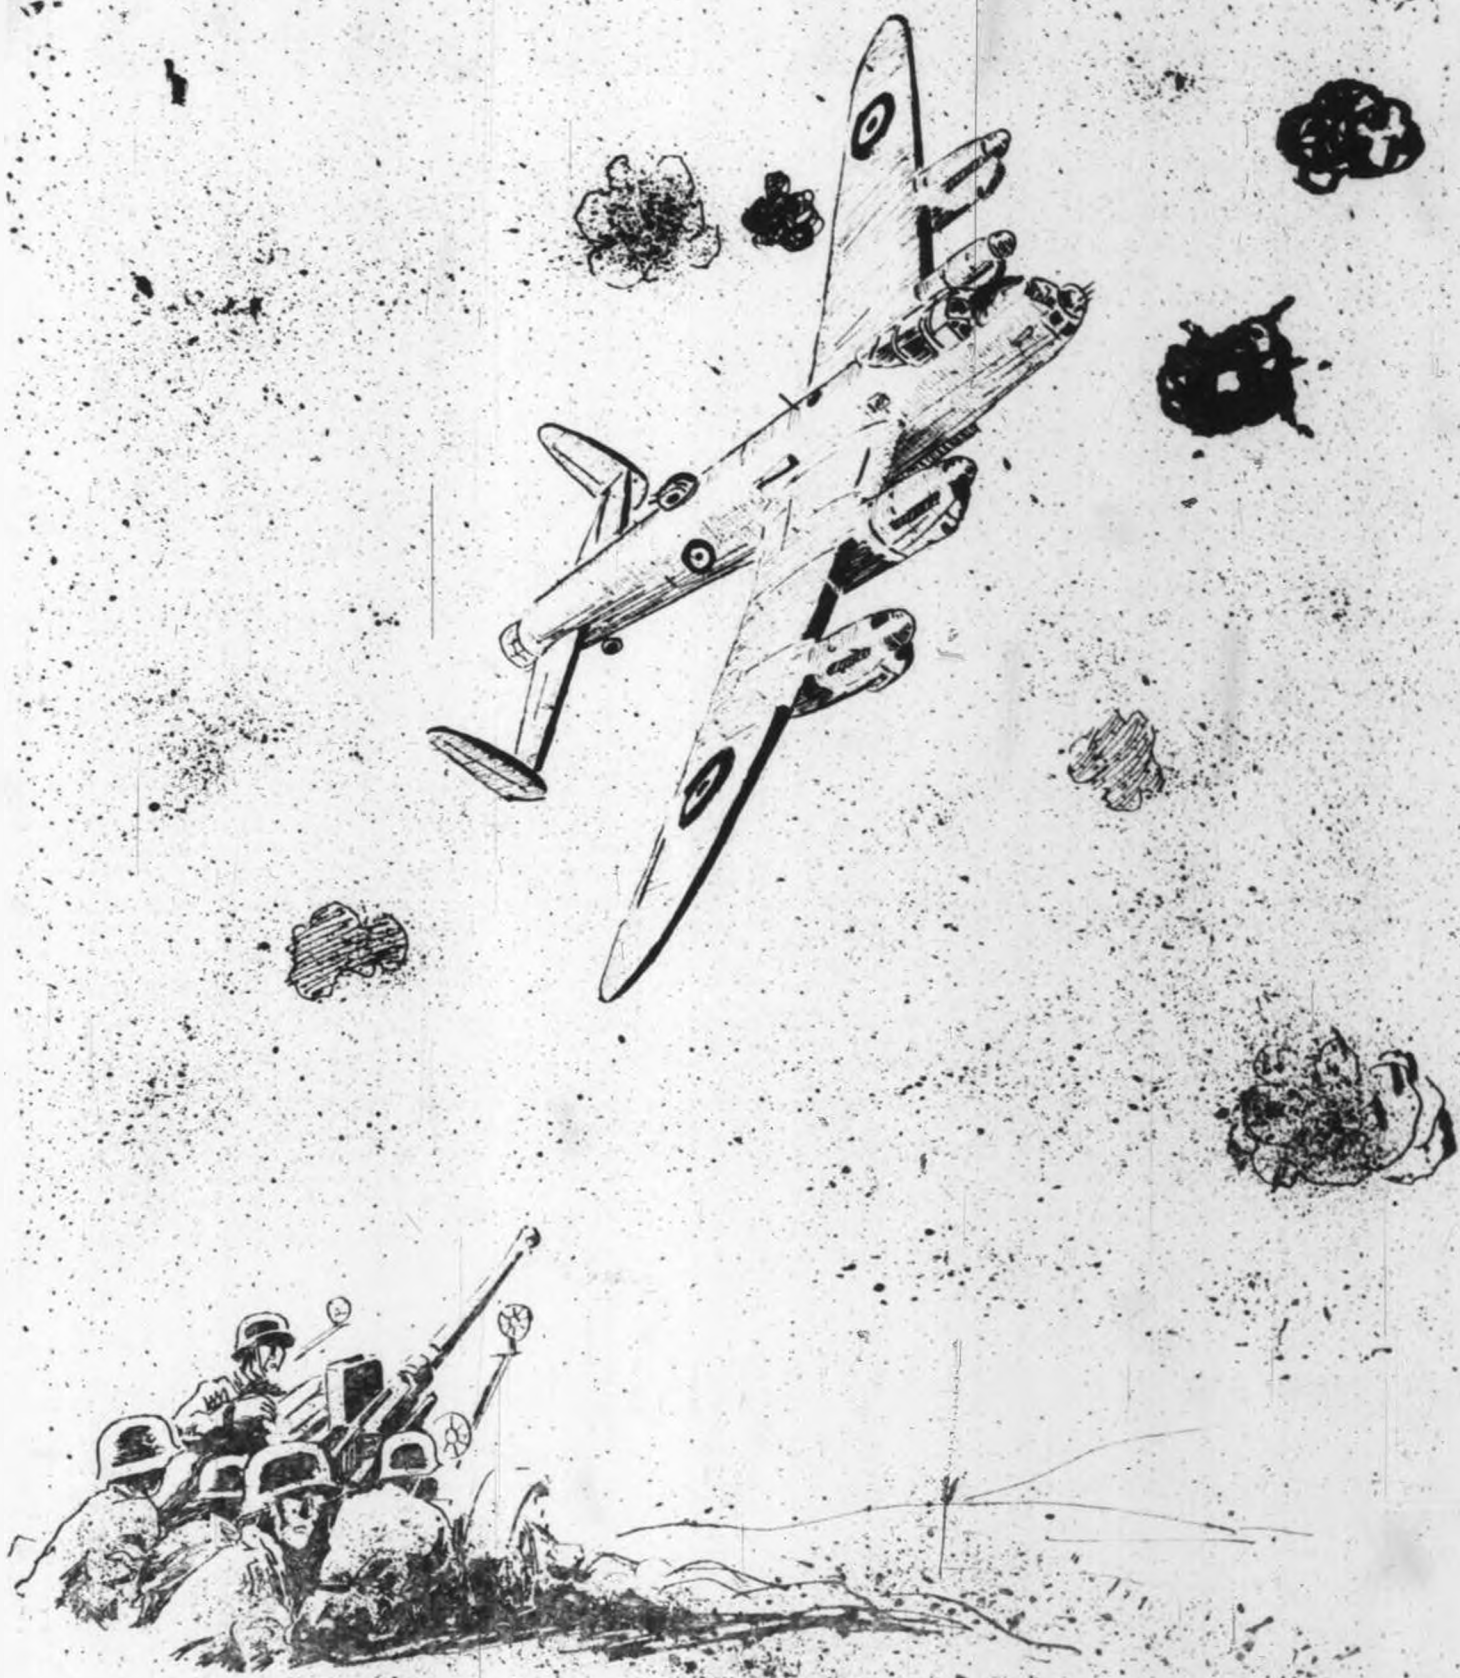

Joe came out with the DSO.

Subsequent flying with 617 resulted in the development of the master bombing technique in which a marker aircraft flew in low, pinpointed the target, while bombers dropped bombs with great accuracy from high altitudes. It was a mission to Munich which proved conclusively that this technique would do more damage with fewer planes and resulted in a bar to McCarthy's DFC and a VC for the leader, Group Captain Cheshire.

For two and a half years McCarthy stayed on operations, gradually filling up a log book which now shows 6,000 hours.

And a lot of that, over 300, was on German aircraft.

As enemy airfields were captured and planes with them. McCarthy was one of the pilots detailed to make test flights and compile data for engineers and scientists to study.

There was Allied testing, too. Numerous types of aircraft were entered in the McCarthy Logbook, including the first jet and the experimental plane, the Flying Wing.

It was this experience that prompted Mc

Carthy to stay in the RCAF instead of returning home, and continue an active flying career instead of reclining from a civilian armchair the time he saw himself portrayed in a famous film and re-reading a best seller which detailed some of the exploits of the dambusters.

He's still flying, but not Lancasters.

In fact, RCAF Comox had just changed over to Neptunes when he arrived in December, 1958 and he saw the last of the Lancasters leave without getting a chance to sit once more at the controls of the aircraft that he flew with such devastating effect one moonlit May night in 1943.

Gray Campbell calls these boys
And with good reason

'THE LUCKIEST

"Okay guys. Mike's tent washes dishes. Rick and Pat will do a treefall. Tim and David meet me for the tracking test in 15 minutes. The rest can buzz off."

Seventeen boys off in a world of their own, 90 miles and a generation away in time. The luckiest kids in the world.

Arid as the father of two, I went along. They belong to the Deep Cove Troop, 6th Tsartlip Scouts. On many counts they are lucky. They live in Canada. Their scouting area is fortunately the evergreen playground of Vancouver Island. But none of this would mean anything without the most important ingredient of all.

They happen to be under the inspired leadership of two young men who are becoming a legend among succeeding groups of Deep Cove youth.

Ken Soles, ex-Navy, is their Scoutmaster. And most of the boys had previously passed through the capable hands of Robert McLennan, who leads the Cubs.

Ken and Rob had organized this "Fun Camp" as a reward for months of hard training and slogging work which establishes the troop with one of the highest ratings in local scouting.

This is the story of a typical weekend outing which these good citizens devote to the youth of their district.

They don't nurse the lads. For a week patrol leaders have been planning the camp and assigning details. Ken and Rob let them make up menus, even proceed with mistakes which show up in practice and which the boys probably never forget. Tents and equipment and the right clothing are sorted and distributed. With a borrowed panel truck, Rob's new station wagon which, one suspects, has been purchased to transport a maximum number of boys, and a car lent by a father, they were off.

Excitement accelerated from high gear when they met May 19 last at the Scout Hall and the older hands told the others what was in store. For Rob had taken leaders to explore the area a year before.

"Port Renfrew, it's real neat."

"And the road in. Boy, I hope we stop on the suspension bridge like last time."

"Yeah, and throw rocks. Wait 'til you see it. It's the highest bridge, I betcha."

"And the marine gardens. Full of things. And we play chicken until someone gets soaked."

"Real neat."

INTO HIGH COUNTRY

At the Shawnigan Lake turn-off on the Malahat, the little convoy climbed into high country. And the excitement went into overdrive. Jim MacKenzie and Mike Graham, David Laird and Jack Payne, Willie Clark and Pat Lannon, David Beattie, Jimmy Dunlop, Rickie, Jonathan, David Crossman, Richard Abbot, Tim and Ian made Dad and the Scoutmaster and the Cubmaster revert to a much happier age. It was pretty convincing that here, in scouting, lay a real hope for the future.

There is a fine discipline even on a fun camp. When they made the promised stop at the high suspension bridge I don't believe many parents would have given boys their heads the way Ken and Rob did. Seventeen wild guys throwing their spirits to the winds high above a deep gorge on a bridge that swayed when one person walked upon it. They lugged rocks almost as heavy as themselves to send crashing far below. They climbed down the steep sides and raced for the peaks like puppies slipped from the leash. And underneath it all there was the priceless experience of the leaders. At the right moment Rob blew the whistle on the game, there was a race for the vehicles, and we were off.

Similarly at the lunch stop these puppies of the boy world were turned loose under experienced eyes. Jamie had to lose something, Jimmy the business type had to sit quietly and figure some angles. Richard soared to adventure. Jack took it calmly like his Dad. David was explosive with words, treating dead air like a radio announcer. And Jonathan behaved like a dignified Cub on his first outing with the Scouts.

Lunch was at Bear Creek. Mike, so the word went, was car sick—probably with excitement—and had decorated the outside of Rob's red station wagon.

On arrival in the Port Renfrew area the leaders spent some time finding the right camping spot. Once a decision was made the real strength of this troop began to show. And it is too bad the pressures of living prevent fathers from seeing this side of their sons.

Ken opened the truck and tossed out equipment with a minimum of words. His leaders had their patrols organized and like a colony of ants the camp went up in less than an hour. They know when to work and when to play.

The work was diverted when David Laird found a "big, bumpy, humpy toad" that took a posse in hot pursuit—and when he was caught had to be passed around. His frightened swallowings put the boys into fits of laughter. Too bad they didn't find a second for a jumping contest.

Many parents had known, of course, something of the training behind this troop. It was nice to see in action. Here are Scouts long on experience and short on badges because Ken and Rob believe a boy should know more than his badge signifies. They had, not to be modest about it, been trained so they could be turned loose anywhere on Vancouver Island and with nothing but the abundance of nature could look after themselves. They had been hiked through a night with a man's pack on their

CENTENARY FLASHBACKS

NEW PRESS

By JOHN SHAW, Editor, The Islander

A hundred years ago today in Victoria The British Colonist was proudly printing its sheets on a brand new Hoe press, which had arrived from New York on July 2.

"Yesterday's steamer," Amor de Cosmos, founder-editor announced a few days previous, "brought us one of Hoe's large fast cylinder presses . . . the cost exceeding $1,600."

The editor explained that for the past seven months due to the rapid increase of circulation "we have found it almost impossible to supply our residents with copies at a sufficiently early hour to suit all classes and we have also been prevented from materially enlarging our sheet on account of the limited size of our old hand press."

With his new press de Cosmos could print the whole day's run in less than an hour.

And it would do job printing, too, he boasted, from wedding cards to mammoth sheet posters.

Right away de Cosmos started thinking about enlarging the size of the paper, and by July 14 it was bigger by a third—the general format unchanged. It was also better printed.

On Oct. 20 of 1862 it was enlarged again and finally, on Dec. 11, it reached the mature news sheet size of that day—21 inches wide and 27½ inches deep—with eight (two and a half-inch) columns to a page.

The Colonist was growing up with the colony and the town that was to become a city that year a century ago.

Always ready to take the initiative in reform, the editor now found his influence increasing with his circulation.

When the matter of the persecution of John Copland came to his attention, therefore, de Cosmos was quick to rush into the breach.

What had happened was somewhat complicated. Copland had come out from Edinburgh apparently qualified as a solicitor. But possibly because of his outspoken disgust with the government of Governor James Douglas, Chief Justice David Cameron took the attitude that he should serve a 12 month clerkship before he could be enrolled as a solicitor.

He served his clerkship with D. B. Ring. He reapplied for enrollment; but again there were delays.

A vast correspondence developed in the case between Copland, the chief justice, the colonial authorities in London, and Scottish jurists, and it appeared that certain documents forwarded to London through the Victoria provincial secretary's office, had been unaccountably delayed. In any event months passed without any satisfaction being forthcoming for the fiery Copland.

Finally more than 100 substantial-citizens signed a petition to the Queen, no less.

Copland had started his clerkship in 1860. It was now the middle of the year 1862.

All this infuriated de Cosmos.

This is what he said of Chief Justice Cameron:

"The promise of the chief justice has been unfulfilled, his word falsified, the law set at defiance, an honest man deprived of his rights; virtually robbed of money that he might have obtained from the fruits of professional industry . . ." and "Governor Douglas has been equally culpable."

Well, in spite of the support of the Duke of Newcastle in the Colonial Office, the authorities managed to keep Copland on the mat until 1866 when his name finally appeared on the list of solicitors.

He was not inactive during this period, however. He got into politics. He headed the polls at the election of Victoria's first city council.

But apparently he lost faith in Victoria, for he left shortly after he was admitted to the bar, and never returned.

KIDS in the WORLD'

backs to bivouac in the open after a long march. But this was a fun camp and they could coast.

COOKS ON THE JOB

All Rob and Ken did was set up their own tent and select a spot for the cook tent. Food had been bought for the camp and three Scouts who had to pass tests went to work on a fine meal of spaghetti and meatballs.

Harris Creek providing some of the purest water in the world attracted the fishermen and the stone skippers while others for tests did some tree felling, dug their sanitation centre and made a grease pit to improve camping conditions.

That evening the cooks produced pork chops, corn, potatoes and fruit cocktail.

When everyone had refueled, Ken and Rob started a Wide Game. On a gravel and sand bottom they marked two 10-foot circles hundreds of yards apart. Teams were chosen to defend each end and with team work and running interception they tried to reach the enemy's circle without being tagged. That is half the game. Immune in the circle, they had to make their way home again without being tagged. It is exciting as good hockey and brings out the finest team and sporting spirit in the boys.

At 10 p.m. there was a cocoa mug-up and at 11 p.m. they were all in their tents, bless their sweet, innocent souls.

But, blast 'em, one tent started singing and this was picked up by a second and then a third. Jimmy had his small transistor radio turned on and about 1 a.m. Ken had to groan his way out of his flea bag and creep into the tent to shut off the rock and roll.

BREAKFAST READY

Sunday morning at 7 a.m. a shout went through the camp that breakfast was ready. Cornflakes, bacon and eggs, bread and jam, coffee, tea and milk.

Another tent was detailed for dishwashing, and it is better not to remark too closely on the way this was tackled. It was a hurry up affair.

Meanwhile some fishermen managed to stick their car in the sand and were helped out.

Jonathan went crashing down and reported with a nosebleed. Everyone turned to Ken, a first aider with industrial qualifications.

It was raining, but in order to fulfil their promises, the leaders loaded the troop at 10.30 for Port Renfrew. From there they set out on an old, wartime, plank road, often overgrown by rain forest jungle and at times non-existent, to the famous zoological and botanical gardens. Two patrol leaders carried packboards with wieners and buns. After the heavy rain everyone was thoroughly soaked as they went through the darkened halls of giant cedars, skunk cabbage with leaves a yard long, salal like young trees hiding rotting planks bridging dangerous gaps, and the deep forest as quiet as an empty cathedral. Vegetation from nature in superlatives, but no sign of birds or animal life.

When we finally found the coast there were the fabulous pools cut in sandstone, artistically arranged by the force of nature, full of marine life, strange colors, mystery and adventure. Boys dashed out to face the mighty Pacific, daring the rollers from Japan to be quicker than they were. Six of them, including Rob, lost and were penalized with a soaking. Pat accelerated too quickly and slipped on sharp rock to cut his knee. Again the calm and competent Ken took over. The real tribute to their Scoutmaster showed on the faces of the boys as he took charge.

And when it was time to turn serious at the rare and wonderful spot they had discovered. It was Ken, with expert knowledge as a skin diver, who introduced them to the world at their feet.

"Look down and study it. What do you see Rick?"

"Sea urchins, limpets, mussels and shell fish."

"Okay, what's this thing, David?"

"I don't know, Scouter Ken."

"Eight plated railons."

They also collected a Japanese fish float, a mysterious pair of thongs and the skull of an otter. Some of the boys filled their haversacks with the start of a useful shell collection.

Ken picked a spot in a rock cleft and started a fire. From the packboards came the wieners and bread, oranges and apples while around the fire wet clothing, soaking boots and socks went up before the flames of the driftwood fire to steam and create atmosphere until the odor of food took over. While they paused to recuperate Ken and Rob identified beach collections and lectured on the outdoors to aid the miracle of youthful discovery.

CHICKEN DINNER

It was a slow return to the cars. That night there was a tremendous meal of chicken stew prepared that morning with great foresight with boiling fowl, celery, onions, carrots and potatoes. It could only match, in memory, an Irish stew made in a jam pail aboard the caboose of a cattle train in the hungry thirties.

Were the boys tired after the long trek to the marine gardens? They should have been. But they breezed through chores, begged for archery lessons and as night approached they coaxed for another Wide Game. The team work had improved and when Ken and Rob got on the teams the bluffing and laughter made magic of the hours. It was exciting and fast and evoked memories of youth. It was great therapy for creeping middle age. It was Scouting.

They had a campfire and songs and told stories and the eyes of the younger ones shone with delight. They had been accepted into the mystery of the chivalrous company.

Ken had to crown the perfect day with a challenge. In order to earn the bedtime mug up the Scouts had to stalk their way to the cook tent without being caught. The leaders armed with flashlights, stood guard while the kettle boiled and the smell of cocoa wafted on the evening air as boys wormed and wiggled and crawled and climbed their way into camp like the scouts of old. They were preparing for the game of life as a kitten playing with a piece of paper or a puppy digging after a scent. The winners were good winners and the losers were manly.

Monday they broke camp and headed for home. Rations had been so carefully figured there was little wastage.

"I'll never forget when we started camping," said Rob, "we had no idea how the boys would eat and we sure guessed wrong."

"I came home once with so many extra loaves we had stale bread in the Soles camp for a week," said Ken.

And the memories of these would sustain them through more training sessions when parent interest grows thin. They knew the boys would never let them down in any worthwhile undertaking good for as much as they take whether conscious or not.

On the drive home the car was quiet, holding the memories of the day and seriously considering the highlights. It had been a good camp. The bonds of friendship had been pulled tighter. Good manners and discipline had prevailed to teach more than they could learn in any other way. There had not been a single dispute, or temper, or tantrum. It had been a fun camp, just like Rob and Ken had promised their work.

"One camp," said Ken, "had a problem for them. A rope strung between trees as an obstacle and each patrol had to figure a way to get a boy and a glass of water over."

"The proper way," said Rob, "was to make staves."

"You never know what they will do," said Ken with a chuckle. "One of them had their boy drink the water. Then they broke the glass."

"And when Ken had given them all such a good time," said Rob, "he decided to award a prize for the best patrol."

And that, too, is Scouting.

There was this here Canadian doctor. He was a gee-whiz guy—smart and dedicated; sort of a wise Dr. Kildare type with Red Crosses in his eyes.

And this young Dr. Grant had a rich Montreal girl friend who wanted him to take a plush job as assistant to a fancy surgeon.

Naturally he spurns the lady and soft life. Instead he charges off to the Congo to do his bit for humanity and self-abasement.

There he meets another Red Cross-eyed soulmate—a nurse who is trying to forget an affair with a renowned doctor that produced an illegitimate child.

Doctor-lover bungled the subsequent abortion.

ASK THE NAME OF THE LION, by Ralph Allen; Doubleday; $1.75.

Antiseptic Mary as portrayed in this new Canadian novel is sexless and sensible; understanding and unpleasant. She and Doc Grant seem destined for, and deserving of, each other.

Doctor and nurse—and several others—are fleeing a rampaging, raping Congolese army in this novel. Ask the Name of the Lion.

Better you should ask the name of the author.

Ralph Allen, former editor of Maclean's Magazine, should be ashamed of himself for writing this literary embarrassment.

He's played a dirty trick on a trusting reading public.

On the heels of his excellent Ordeal by Fire—the well-researched and tightly written story of Canada in war and peace—he has churned out a mediocre pot-boiler.

Mercifully it is a short book.

Ask the Name etc. is a shoot-em-up, track-em-down adventure—a sort of jungly western which is as shoddy as Ordeal by Fire was sharp.

With Doc Grant and Nurse Mary are a mixed-up Congolese government minister, a dissolute Belgian settler (and his African mistress) and a swashbuckling Spanish chap called Sierra.

Sierra is a curiosity. He seems the alter-ego of Mr. Allen's aspirations; a Walter Mitty concoction who is 10 feet tall and courage personified.

Mr. Allen has let his daydreaming (or secret yearning) get the better of him in depicting Sierra. This fellow is so busy fighting wars and revolutions that his artistic and musical genius only buds, but never blossoms.

Sierra was a guerrilla in the Spanish Civil War (at 20 years old?); a private-to-colonel soldier in the Second World War, and a lieutenant-to-general success story in Korea.

In Their Hundred Years of History They Have Fought

This book is the bare-bones 100 years history of five military units which have been absorbed into today's Royal Regiment of Canada.

As a condensation it is commendable, as a living document it isn't.

The Royal Regiment grew from the 10th Royal Grenadiers, the 3rd Battalion, CEF (The Toronto Regiment) and the 58th, 123rd, 124th, 170th and 204th Battalions, CEF.

It all started simply enough when patriotic Torontonians met shortly after the outbreak of the American Civil War to consider forming a militia regiment. In 1862—five years before Confederation—the group was granted official status as the 10th Royal Grenadiers.

The war scare prompted by the War between the States passed, and the unit paraded in a peacetime atmosphere until it was called out for the Northwest or Riel Rebellion.

Here the unit was blooded at the Battle of Batoche. Three were killed in the attack against the Indian and half-breed rebels, but the regiment carried the day.

Thus through the Boer War, World War—where most of the history was made by the 3rd Battalion (The Toronto Regiment)—until the Second World War, by which time all the units in this history were combined in the Royal Regiment.

The documentary nature of the story limits the anecdotes that might have made history come alive.

Probably the author doesn't deserve to be entirely condemned for this. He must have had a lot of veterans seeking recognition for whichever unit they called their own.

Later in his history Major Goodspeed gives cavalier treatment to the Royal's decimation at Dieppe in 1942. While Dieppe may not have been a great victory—the regiment was virtually wiped out in the action—it still seems worthy of fuller treatment.

There are other criticisms: In casualty lists names of officers are given while the wounded or killed men are tersely fobbed off as "... and 17 other ranks."

Members of the regiment wore two Victoria Crosses, but the achievements which won them are too briefly stated.

About the Author

MAJOR D. J. GOODSPEED, author, works in the historical section of army headquarters in Ottawa. It was he who wrote a controversial article in a semi-official NATO magazine, titled "The Secret Army," describing how military coups might be organized in dictatorship countries. Authorities in Britain were displeased.

As he wraps up his history Major Goodspeed becomes lyrical:

"It has been a strange, sobering journey, this trip through a hundred years of Canadian military history."

"And the men we have met' Col. Cumberland the founder of the regiment (that is the 10th Royal Grenadiers); Col. Brunel and Col. Gooderham ... and then, as in a flood, the memories of the men of the First World War—Col. Allan at Mount Sorrell and Capt. Van Der Smitten, and Lieut. Gordon; Col. Rogers and with him Major Mason.

Major Kippen, Capt. Clift and dozens more, too numerous to mention but too admirable ever to be forgotten ...

"And 20 years later it is the same again, another host of unforgettable personalities, pressing in upon the present from the past. Col. Basher, training the regiment for action; Lt. Col. Catto incredibly leading his handful of men over the wall and through the wire at Puy's Beach; Lt. Col. Lendrum holding a quiet orders group and telling his company how to winkle out the enemy."

EDWARD BENNETT WILLIAMS

He is one of the relatively small number of notable lawyers in the United States willing to risk public obloquy in defending unpopular clients. He carried the ball for both the late Senator Joseph McCarthy and Teamster Boss Jimmy Hoffa. He performed the same service for Igor Malekh, a Soviet diplomat accused of espionage, and for gambler Frank Costello in an action to strip him of his citizenship.

The one common link in all these cases is the principle of individual rights. Williams will take a case if he feels that principle has been infringed. His book is not a record of his forensic triumphs, but a discussion of fundamental tenets of law affecting personal liberties, supported by appropriate illustrations from his cases.

The very fact that he has elected not to parade his courtroom victories (and he has had more than his share of these), but chooses rather to talk of the citizen's right to due process of law, indicates the kind of lawyer he is.

"I want to write of the transcendent importance of safeguarding and preserving intact all of our civil liberties, and of my deep conviction that whenever government infringes on any of those rights it begins with the weak and the friendless, or the scorned and the degraded, or the nonconformist and the unorthodox. It never begins with the strong, the rich, the popular, or the orthodox."

Williams deplores the tendency by the public to identify a lawyer with his client, and points out that no one objects when a doctor removes the appendix of an accused murderer. If you have sometimes felt tempted to presume the guilt of a person who takes the Fifth Amendment, I suggest you read Williams on the subject. He cites the case of a well-known trade union leader who refused, under the Fifth Amendment, to recognize his own son. It seemed laughable, yet Williams proves conclusively that if the man had answered the question he would have compromised his whole case.

In the McCarthy case, Williams was retained to defend the senator against the Senate censure motion. Here Williams reveals what was not generally known at the time, namely, that McCarthy rejected a compromise motion which would have staved off censure.

Williams is opposed to capital punishment, which he thinks should be relegated to the past along with the rack, the thumbscrew and other discarded instruments of primitive justice.

"Capital punishment," he asserts, "is indefensible if only because it renders irreversible miscarriages of justice."

The point seems to me incontrovertible. Williams notes, too, that during 1958, 1959 and 1960 the majority of persons executed in the U.S. were indigent Negroes. "A penalty which has been virtually abolished for white men with money ought to be abolished for everybody."

Edward Bennett Williams is a lawyer with a heart as well as a head. Reading his book is, as Dean Eugene V. Rostow of Yale says in his introduction, "a call to battle in the perpetual struggle for constitutional liberty through law."

Roth Prefers the Novel Form

By JOHN BARKHAM

With his first collection of short stories, Goodbye, Columbus, Philip Roth had the distinction of winning the National Book Award for fiction in 1960. With his first novel, Letting Go (Random House), whether or not it wins any awards, he seems securely embarked on what promises to be a highly successful career as a novelist.

Mr. Roth, who spent the past year serving as visiting lecturer in the Writers' Workshop at the University of Iowa, was in New York recently for the publication of his new book. (Next year he will be teaching at Princeton.) He is a youngish man to look at, but his intense, deliberate manner is that of a much older person. He speaks quickly but precisely, in words that can be recorded as uttered.

His novel, he told me, had been begun well before the publication of Goodbye, Columbus. The pressure to attempt the larger form had thus been entirely internal. "As a matter of fact, the book began as a short story, but as I wrote it I found it getting longer and longer. So I began all over again, this time with a different viewpoint and let it run on. So you can see the switch to a novel came out of an allegiance to the idea."

The experience of working on a larger canvas had proved enlightening and also, I gathered, exhilarating. There was for one thing, the different approach to character. "In a short story you don't become too involved in matters of character," he said. "You have characters, of course, but you reveal them through incident. In a novel you settle on characters and really explore them—explore the adventure of being, you might say."

Philip Roth doesn't believe in letting characters run away with a book; the writer, while allowing them to develop, must always remain in control. "I invented characters to the point where situations began to unfold which I had not foreseen. I was delighted." Indeed, it was obvious that this young artist felt he had matured in writing his novel.

"More things are done and understood in a novel," he went on, warming to his explanation. "Certainly it's more complex than any short story. One of the nice things about a novel is that you can go forward and wait for it all to 'jell' later. In a short story everything has to be just right all the time. If any part is not right, the story itself isn't right."

"What pleases me most regardless of the success or otherwise of this novel is that I feel I was able to do all I was capable of. So often you get a frustrated feeling that your talent is larger than what you're saddled with. This particular vehicle drew on the best I had in me."

Roth works four or five hours a day, and when he really hits his stride he can write a chapter in a week, though the re-writing often takes two or three times that.

Roth is a master of dialogue and Letting Go will often give the reader the feeling of participating in the conversations rather than overhearing them. He likes writing dialogue, though he prunes it severely in revision.

It was clear from our discussion that his first novel had blooded Philip Roth as effectively that he would waste little time before going on to the next. This proved to be the case. Though reluctant to discuss a future project, he conceded that he had already begun writing a new novel and that it was going reasonably well. With flair for understatement, that sounded very promising indeed.

A TOURIST'S GUIDE

More than 4,000 selected hotels are listed in a new official guide to hotels and restaurants in Britain, now available from the British Travel Association, 90 Adelaide Street W. Toronto, for $1.

The 350-page book is also a comprehensive guide to Britain's tourist attractions. The hotel and restaurant selections are completely unbiased. No payment is made for inclusion and no hotel advertisement is accepted. Value for rates charged is the sole criterion for listings.

The guide lists hotels and inns for every city, town and village in Britain which has accommodation to offer, including a special section on London, interesting locations. In addition to quoting one night and weekly rates, it indicates availability of private bathrooms and elevators, central heating, air conditioning, dining facilities, garage space, languages spoken and historical significance.

Touring notes on each place listed are provided along with maps of tourist areas and recommended restaurants and nightclubs throughout Britain, with average meal prices quoted.

AGNES CARNE TATE recounts

CLUTESI'S TALES

Attendance at George Clutesi's night school classes on "Indian Folklore and Legend" has convinced me that in robbing the Indians of their land and destroying their culture, we have also robbed ourselves.

When the white man first came to this coast the Indians certainly hadn't attained to his level of civilization, but over the centuries they had built up a way of life that was admirably suited to the climate and the natural foods that existed in such abundance.

Unlike the white man, who seems determined to destroy everything in one generation, they never killed more than they had to in order to live and made sure that nature was always able to replenish her supplies. For that reason they never ate eggs, thus always ensuring a plentiful supply of game birds. They did all their food gathering from spring to fall, and in the winter they feasted, danced, sang, put on their plays and visited.

Of course, they warred amongst themselves, but hasn't the white man been known to do that, too?

Clutesi (meaning whale-hunter) said he could tell some things about the Indians that would make our hair stand on end. But doesn't a certain waxwork "Chamber of Horrors" show that the Indians had no monopoly in that direction either?

Mr. Clutesi said that the Nootka, or West Coast Indians, were a happy, laughing people and I am certain that everyone who has attended his classes will agree that this must have been true.

The stories that were told in this course were moral tales for children. Indian parents never said, "Don't do this," or "Don't do that" to their children. They instructed them by parables which were passed on by word of mouth from one generation to another. The legends varied, from tribe to tribe according to the imaginative powers of the tellers. Some tales were regarded as the particular prosperity of certain tribes and for another tribe to use them was regarded in much the same light as a white man would feel about someone stealing his apples.

Children were always treated with the greatest respect by their elders and were taught to treat their elders in the same way. During a feast they were supposed to stay in the background, but if a small child did venture out into the centre of the hall he was not punished, the parents were. For being such poor disciplinarians they were compelled to give the next feast!

It is a far cry from that day to the incidents we read about nowadays of children being burnt to death while their parents are away. It shows what the white man has done to the Indian by giving him "fire water," taking away his means of livelihood and destroying his self-respect.

THE VARIOUS TRIBES of Nootka Indians inhabit the western coast of Vancouver Island, with a small segment on Cape Flattery in Washington State. "Nootka really means encircling."

which was the answer the Indian Chief gave when Captain Cook asked where his people lived. He meant all the country roundabout.

All the tribes had one belief in common. They believed in one God, the Creator of all things, that He was a part of everything He created and that all beings of His creation—people, birds and animals—were all equal and that all could talk to one another. In the moral tales for children we find creatures as delightful and fantastic as any Walt Disney could conjure up. As these stories were for children, the characters were almost always referred to as "son of" to show that they too were young.

THE FIRST STORY told how the Indian people got fire. In the beginning, only the Wolf people (Qwa-ya-tseek) had fire and they guarded it jealously, refusing to let anyone else share it. The other people had to shiver in the wintertime and eat their food raw because they had no fire. All the bravest, the strongest, the fleetest and the wisest, tried to get fire away from the Wolf People but the Wolf People were always too smart for them.

Finally little Ah-tush-mit, son of Deer, said he would get it for the human people. They all laughed at him for his presumption but finally agreed to let him try. He got them to dress him up in a fancy costume, then he went and tied dried swamp grass behind his knees.

Son of Deer made his way to the Wolf encampment and started in singing and dancing just outside the circle of fire. He kept getting closer and closer, singing louder and louder, and bounding higher and higher, till finally with one mighty leap he jumped right over the top of the fire and raced back into the forest.

In his leap, the dried grass caught fire. Ah-tush-mit's knees were burned black, which is why the knees of deer are black to this day, but he had brought fire to the human people and they honored him for it. The moral of this story was that the race was not always to the swift nor the battle to the strong, but that lesser people could sometimes do great things.

IN THE NEXT TALE Ah-tush-mit came to a sad end because he allowed his success to go to his head. He decided one morning to go fishing. He was going to catch enough cod to fill his canoe and feed everyone in the village. The Indian never fished or hunted just for himself. It was for the benefit of everyone in the village.

Son of Deer got up early in the morning, put his canoe into the water and went out to the cod-fishing grounds. He jigged and he jigged, till the sun was high in the sky but not a bite did he get.

Then off in the distance he spied a canoe filled with Wolf People coming toward him. He was too small for them to bother with so they passed by at a distance. This made Ah-tush-mit think he was safe and he became cheeky.

"Boney-noses. Boney-noses. Bone-eaters all" he chanted to himself.

"What did you say?" called out the Wolf chief who had very keen ears.

"I said, a fine journey to you all," replied Ah-tush-mit somewhat frightened, but added under his breath, as he thought, "Boney-noses, Boney-noses. Bone-eaters all." But the Wolf People heard him, came back, picked him up, canoe and all, took him back to their village and made a slave of him.

But Ah-tush-mit was such a gay and lively little fellow and charmed the Wolf People so with his singing and dancing that they soon came to trust him and gave him more and more freedom. He used to sing them to sleep and one night he sang a song that was so soothing that he soon had everyone in a deep sleep. Then Ah-tush-mit rose from his bed, took the sharp mussel-shell knife he had secretly made and with one blow cut off the wolf chief's head.

HE GRABBED the head, ran for his canoe, put it in the water and set off for home.

It was morning before the Wolf People discovered what had happened and they were terribly angry. At first they didn't know what to do, then they decided to go to Crane, (Ah-noos-mit) who kept the fog in a big bag, and asked him if they could take the bag to the shore and let out some fog so that Ah-tush-mit would get lost in it and come back to where he started. Crane consented but in a deep, hoarse voice, told them to be very careful and let the fog out a tiny bit at a time. But the Wolf People were in a hurry so they let out so much fog that they couldn't even see each other. So they had to shove all the fog back into the bag and start over again.

This time they were more careful and the fog drifted out across the water. In a short time they heard Ah-tush-mit singing in the fog, boasting of cutting off the Wolf chief's head and taking it home as a present for his mother. Soon his canoe touched shore but when he jumped out all the Wolf People rushed at him and he just had time to cry out, "Don't eat my stomach," before the Wolf People fell on him and devoured him. The Indians believed that life resided in the stomach and that if that were not destroyed, the being could be reproduced. They said that was why wolves would not eat the stomachs of deer.

In this tale, poor little Ah-tush-mit hadn't kept his mind on what he was doing, had been cheeky, had betrayed those who trusted him and so had come to a sad end.

AT ABOUT halfway through the course, Mr. Clutesi invited Mrs. Sam Joseph of the Songhees Indians to bring her drums and sing some of her songs for us. One of the drums was 100 years old. It had a painting of the Thunderbird and the Whale on it, but in this case the Whale wasn't much larger than a sardine. The artist had fitted the half-opened wings of the Thunderbird beautifully into the circular shape of the drum. Mrs. Joseph was a member of the Nitinat tribe and she remembers all the songs and dances that were taught to her as a young girl by a 100-year-old woman in the tribe.

With the Indians, songs belong to the individual and stories to the tribe. Each baby was given a separate lullaby at birth and no one else was allowed to sing it. There was an exception to this. If the eldest child couldn't sing a song correctly—words and music—the first time he tried, the second child could have a chance and the song became his if he did it correctly.

Indian music sounds outlandish to our ears for it all seems to be sung in a minor key and they use the 12-tone scale. They sing "in the cracks" so to speak, so the white person keeps hearing half notes his ears are not accustomed to. One of the songs Mrs. Joseph sang was hauntingly beautiful and sounded much like a Hebridean lullaby that I asked her if it could possibly have been learned from a white trader. But she said no, it was one the old woman had taught her and she had got it from her parents before her.

THE RHYTHM in all the songs is perfect and is fitted to the motion it tells about. All the stories Mr. Clutesi told had their own songs and one mussel knife-sharpening song had such an infectious rhythm that you could feel the edge coming on the knife. Captain Cook said the singing of the natives as they paddled around his ship at night soothed him to sleep.

Mrs. Joseph, like Mr. Clutesi, is interested in reviving the songs, dances and legends of her people. She is teaching the dances to some 20 children at the Songhees Reserve and one little white girl was so fascinated by them that she asked to join the class! Mrs. Joseph was asked to bring them to one of the night school classes, which she did. The children were delightful to watch and they themselves were thrilled to have a real stage to dance on. They do their practising on the dirt floor of the old long house on the reserve. The tribe hopes to build a new long house this summer with an asphalt floor and to perform their songs and dances in there.
